Far sighted eyes in Minnesota are looking towards Wisconsin and looking carefully over the compulsory unemployment insurance plan which went into effect on July 1 of this year. The plan, novel in its provisions, stipulates that neither the state nor the employees supply funds for the insurance reserves and the administrators of the plans say that it is more a labor turnover stabilization plan than unemployment insurance. It provides that each employer pays a tax of 2 percent of his payroll into an individual unemployment reserve which averages $75 per employee. There is no pool, each employer acting as an individual. Proponents of the plan say that in this way the employer whose labor is steady is not penalized for the employer having a great labor turnover. Instead an incentive is offered to the employer who keeps his labor for longer periods of time inasmuch as he is not required to have more than an average of $75 per employee in the reserves. Furthermore, firms which have a high financial rating are permitted to place their unemployment reserves into working capital. The Wisconsin plan has been under scrutiny from all parts of the nation and especially Minnesota where it is almost certain that an unemployment insurance bill will introduced in the 1935 session of the legislature.

Farmers are jubilant over the heavy rains and snowfalls that the state is now enjoying. The same goes for sportsmen and lovers of the outdors. The dry cycle, which is said to have run its course raised havoc with agriculture, lake levels, and the general conditions of the northwest. It is to be hoped that prevailing snowfalls mean the end of the drouth, dust storms and the hundred and one evils that accompany dry periods.

Production of commodities for use by needy families in the state is continuing under the direction of the SERA. Mattress factories in the Twin Cities and Duluth have turned out 4,300 finished articles since work was started in October. Of this amount, more than 3,000 already have been given to relief families. A cannery in St. Cloud has turned out 800,000 tins of beef since September, while another plant in Duluth is boning 8,000 pounds of beef daily, preparatory to canning the meat. All of these articles are given as surpluses, and are in addition to the clients regular budgets. According to L. H. Jacobson, SERA industrial engineer, almost 2,000 clients are employed on these projects.

Testimony at the last two First Bank Stock Corporation investigation hearings revealed that the "insiders" were able to buy First Bank Stock Corporation stock at $25 a share while the public were paying $47.50 a share. Sam Stevenson of the First National Bank of Great Falls, Montana, was the recipient of 4,000 shares of stock at $25 a share while the stock was selling at $47.50, netting him $45,000 according to testimony it was further revealed that C. T. Jaffray, president of the corporation, had been authorized by the executive committee to appoint a committee to look into the matter of furnishing stock to the directors at the different price than to the "outsiders." Both of the hearings were cut short by the trial of the Banco officials at Moorhead.

It has been reported that many children under 16 years of age have gone over the state line, to Wisconsin, quitting school, to work in night clubs. The Wisconsin Industrial Commission promised to cooperate with the Minnesota unit and order the return of these children to Minnesota and to school.

WHAT PRICE PROFITS?

By

KAY JACKSON

For example, consider the part the NRA "more abundant life" goal has played in the sorry profits-showing of June Railroad earnings:—Figures made public in August showed their volume of business (NRA inspired) and their revenues (ditto) increased, but that the increase in their operating expenses (ditto) was a much larger increase than the increase in revenues. Result, three of the strongest rail issues made new lows for the year on one August morning. So some more money is likely to become a burden, but "capital" will become still more "timid". Already new recruits, a horde of them, have enlisted in the army sniping at the President for the government's interference with business, meaning interference with profits, and the worm-eaten banner "More business in government; less government in business," was removed from its six-year resting place in the mausoleum, dusted off, and blatantly flung to the breeze above a thousand platforms in the recent election campaign. Since the elections, however the boys are pursuing a slightly different tack, though they are still working for the same result. Yet "the more abundant life for all" goal seems still a long way off, and our progress toward it is but at a snail's pace. All of which again proves that you cannot ride two horses going in opposite directions at the same time.

With bank surplus growing hourly, with bankers complaining that money is a burden and bribing their depositors to come and cart it away, Wm. Green picks the same moment to burst in among his fellow-workers in the American Federation of Labor toiling for ten days in convention at Atlantic City to demand the immediate restoration of the CWA to provide jobs for an estimated ten million still unemployed! Is one dollar of this burden-money available for one unemployed man? Not under the Profit System. The only "good" use, which Banker Nichols declares gives value to money, is, under the Profit System, the making of profits. There are no profits in CWA work. It follows therefore that the burden-money cannot go directly to the unemployed men. It cannot while the Profit System is still alive. So the government must borrow the burden-dollars, guaranteeing the profits to the tired bankers (for the equally tired-depositors), pay it over to the ten million men, employing them at work from which it will not get a dime back. Then, after the burden-dollars have all been paid over to the ten million men, the government must also pay them back to the tired bankers (for the equally tired depositors), and it must also pay these gentry the profits, guaranteed in the first place else the government could not have secured the burden-dollars. The ten million men by this time will again be without work, their money will have again found its niche in the private cash-register of some merchant, there to rest until the guarantee of certain profits again beckons to it to come forth, and another fervid and soul-stirring speech will be due from President William Green of the American Federation of Labor. By this time, too, the tired bankers and the equally tired depositors, more overburdened than before by this added load of profits which the government has presented to them, will doubtless be bordering upon a state of total prostration. But "it's an ill wind that blows" etc., because the mechanical pencil business will again come into its own!

The Profit System is Dead

Since it is now clear that the single hitch in all our best-laid plans can be described in two words, Profit System, why do we hesitate about removing the hitch? What is there Divine? What needful, or useful? Take a good look at it Everyone should be able to see that it's done for. Why can't we be frank about it and admit it out loud? We are like the type of parent who gives the children loaded fire-arms with which to "play bandit," then affect great surprise and wonderment when a youngster is carried in with an eye shot out! Why remain so simple? Or is it we are just pretending to be simple? We see on every hand the tragic results of the Profit System still suffered to remain in force and power long after its ability to function in a normal manner has departed. This fact is pointed out to us and we exclaim wide-eyed, to one another, Clara, Lou, & Em style, "Why! Do you suppose there is r-r-really something wrong with it?" The only thing wrong with it is that for all practical purposes the profit system is deader than Moses!

And despite the facts briefly touched upon in this paper we observe the President and his entire Party all down in the morgue working like supermen, and vainly of course, trying to breathe the breath of life again into the rapidly stiffening form upon the slab—vainly attempting to make the Profit System function as of yore. They do not yet understand that for at least ninety percent of us, it is as extinct as the dodo.

Forty million employed persons are praying only that they may be retained on the job. They are not asking for profits. Ten million unemployed persons are praying only that they be given a job. They are not asking for profits. Thirty million farmers, losing money steadily for more than a decade, are today praying only for production costs. They are not asking for profits. Who is there left? With these eighty million people and their dependents, accounted for, how many of our hundred and thirty million people are holding out for profits? Just how many are still sulking in their tents as they have been for five years, only because the government cannot guarantee them profits? In short, just how many individuals are holding us up?

And since for all save this handful the Profit System is dead, why does Simeon Fess and Manager Fletcher, and two or three other persons, insist that the Republican Party be given a turn at the pulmotor? The Republican Party stood at the bedside from October 1929 to March 1933 and watched the ebbing life, the gasping breath, of the Profit System without so much as waving a solitary fan. What is the idea of its coming around now? And why should the LaFollettes, the Progressives, or any Third Party springing from the loins of the people yearn for a chance, also, at the stiff?

Most important of all, since the universal cry from tens of millions of throats is merely "give us steady jobs at good wages" since outside of a handful of Capitalists no mention is ever made of profits why don't we simply draw the shades, light the candles, (if we are inclined that way), and come up out of the morgue, into the sun-light, and get going?

Mr. Roosevelt paid high tribute to the forest workers and the men who have accomplished so much in the government National Park Service, creating the most beautiful and extensive system of National Parks anywhere on Earth. All done without profits. He could with equal accuracy have cited the State and Federal highways that span the continent. Unexcelled in quality, for over-shadowing all other nations in mileage, they provide another striking example of what the government has done without profits or hope of profits. If the government had owned its own sources of supply, its brick kilns, its cement plants, etc., the record would have been still more imposing. He could with equal truthfulness, have touched upon the far-reaching arms of the United States Postal Service. Here is the biggest business in this or any other country, whose record for speed, accuracy, and efficiency is untouched by any other group of workers whether in private industry or in public service, and this record was made and is steadily maintained by tens of thousands of loyal employees, among whom there is not one individual who is or ever was motivated by the thought of profits!

And so, since the universal cry is for jobs, and NOT for profits why doesn't the government, with its power of eminent domain, with its new and powerful NRA Industrial Emergency Committee, Richberg, Ickes, Perkins, Hopkins, Davis, with the courageous leader in supreme command that Franklin Delano Roosevelt has already a thousand times demonstrated himself to be, and still enthusiastically and whole-heartedly backed by overwhelming majority—the vast masses of "we the people",—why doesn't the government begin answering today this simple and most basic appeal?

THE EVILS OF DRINKING SHOW GREAT INCREASE

By W. G. Calderwood

A year has passed. Every hope that lured the voters to grant John Barleycorn a reprieve has failed.

It was hoped that legal liquor would banish the bootlegger and blindpigger. Richard Choate, Jr., the liquor "czar", acknowledges that half of the retail supply of hard liquor is illicit, and Secretary Morgenthau concedes that the bootleg booze is of better quality than the legal product.

It was hoped that repeal would reduce drunkenness. Official records show that in most cities drunkenness has increased from 10 percent to 1000 percent, that arrests for drunken driving have increased 1.5 percent in Connecticut; 42 percent in Washington, D. C.; 100 percent in Rhode Island; 122 percent in New Orleans; 300 percent in Philadelphia; 380 percent in Cincinnati; 479 percent in Los Angeles, and similarly thruout the nation.

It was hoped that repeal would remove the temptation of drinking from youth and women. Press reports from many of the chief cities of the nation show that women crowd the public bars, and that liquor is freely sold illegally to high school students and even to children from the grades, and that drunkenness and moral delinquency in the teen age has reached proportions never before approached in the history of the Republic.

The voters were assured repeatedly, solemnly and emphatically that the saloon should never, never return. Over 400,000 saloons have been licensed to take the place of the 177,000 closed by prohibition and the evils in the modern saloon beggars all comparison with those of the pre-prohibition era.

The noisy repealers, who loudly protested their abhorrence of the evils of non-enforced prohibition, far from objecting to those same evils now multiplied under repeal seem to enjoy them so hilariously that they are utterly oblivious to the appalling spectacle of youth staggering down the primrose path to destruction.

ARYANS RUNNING AMUCK IN THE GERMAN REICHTAG

Berlin (TIS)—An all time height of Aryan legislation has been reached by a decision of the Reichs' chamber of lawyers, concerning the officially requested dissolution of a prominent German law firm. The partners in this firm are father and son, and the dissolution was ordered on the ground that the father is a non-Aryan (he has a Jewish grandmother) while his son is an Aryan, "since the Aryan rule applies only to the last three generations." It would be unthinkable to concede a partnership between the two under such circumstances, aside from the fact that such partnership between an Aryan and a non-Aryan is expressly forbidden by law.

Santo Domingo City

Comparatively few Americans realize that Santo Domingo City has more historic interest than any other place in the Americas, observes a writer in the Washington Post. It was the first city and capital laid out and constructed by Spaniards in the New world, and was referred to feelingly by the Conquistadores as La Cuna or Cradle of America. The original city was founded by Bartolome Columbus, brother of Christopher on August 4, 1496, on the east bank of the Ozama river, near its mouth. It was named by Bartholome in honor of his father Domingo Columbus, and the fact that the first stone was laid on a [illegible] which was also the day [illegible] Santo Domingo.

Who's Who

THE phone bell woke me. I answered and heard Ned Kendall's voice demand:

"Say, do you go to bed with ear muffs on?"

"No," I said, "but a clear conscience brings sound sleep. You wouldn't know about that."

He gave a snort of contempt.

"Listen, Bert—I need you. There's an English producer named Sir Wilfred Leigh-Bromley in town, visiting the studios. I'm dated to interview him at nine tonight for a feature story. How about you handling it? Only take a short while. I've got a date."

I thought over my plans. I was to meet Miriam's train at one in the morning. I'd been reminding myself of the day and hour for a week. A man has to be careful to remember when his wife's coming home.

"All right. But why don't you lay off chasing? Some day the Husband's Protective league is going to put ants in your pants."

"Hah! Herbert Saunders, the saint. Man, how I'd love to catch you without your halo some time! Well, thanks for taking the job, anyway. Better use my name; that'll save explanations. He's at the Christine-Plaza. So long."

I hung up, swung out of bed, and started dressing. There was still some tell-tale evidence to be disposed of: bottles to be thrown out and a couple of shirts with rouge-smudged collars for the laundry. Miriam wouldn't be pleased if she found those around. Neither would I.

* * * * * * * *

Our table at the Capitol club was in an alcove near the dance floor; we had a good view of the place. Sir Wilfred ordered sparkling Moselle, then said:

"Look here, Mr. Kendall—you're sure this idea isn't a bore to you?"

I said: "Not at all—a pleasure."

"I'm glad. You see, your Hollywood night clubs are quite famous with us abroad. I should hate to have left without even a look at one, and this was my last chance. Shall have to be off tomorrow."

"Yes," he pursued; "back to Elstree and the job. Hope I shall profit some by the immense lot I've learned here. Been trying for a year to manage this visit—ever since my wife came over to appear in your films. By the by, I dare say you know her: Mae Siddon?"

I did, though not as his wife. But I kept surprise from showing.

I don't know when he first saw them.

"Mr. Kendall," he said, "would you verify an impression, please? I believe that's my wife across the floor, dancing with the blond young gentleman?"

I look and saw Mae Siddon clinging tightly against Ned Kendall. They moved a very little to the waltz music. While we watched, they exchanged a kiss. That brought a guttural sound from the Britisher.

"Yes," I told him; "guess it is."

"Rotten little cheat!" said Leigh-Bromley through shut teeth. "Do you by chance know the man, Mr. Kendall?"

I had my mouth ready with the name when I realized the man out there and I couldn't both be Ned Kendall. Then I considered explaining the substitution; but I didn't. It was Ned's mess and he could handle it.

"No," I said, finally; "never saw him before. Sorry."

Sir Wilfred rose. "Well, perhaps I can learn. Excuse me a moment."

The dance was ending as he moved away. I drank some more wine and decided that if Leigh-Bromley came back without his information, I'd spill it after all. Ned had it coming, and I had a reputation as a moralist to maintain.

The producer had been gone about ten minutes when I became aware of the headwaiter, bending over me. He said confidentially:

"Beg pardon, sir; the gentleman who was here entrusted me with a message for you. He had no time to write. He said the lady left her table long enough for him to barge over, posing as an autograph collector, and get the bounder's signature. He said you'd understand."

I nodded and asked if that were all.

"No, sir. He said he must rush off at once to look up his attorney's local agent; there'd be no time in the morning, as his boat sailed at six. He asked me to convey his humblest apologies, sir."

The mention of time reminded me to look at my watch. I jumped up; I had just half an hour to reach the depot and met Miriam. I said:

"Okay—thanks. Wait a minute; here's something for your trouble."

I fished in my pockets, but could find only a twenty and some change. So I told him:

"Come out to the desk and I'll draw you a check."

The waiter purred a grateful phrase and followed me. I made out a check for five dollars and gave it to the man. He began a suave thanks, but it suddenly trailed off. I looked a question at him.

"Pardon me, sir," he said stiffly; "there must be some mistake. You've signed this Herbert Saunders. That was the name of the gentleman [illegible] your friend's book. I saw it with my own eyes, sir."

Banks Fishing Gets Its Name From Ocean Bottom

Banks fishing gets its name from the banks or hilly portions of the ocean bottom, found between the shore and the deep waters of the Atlantic. The main banks range from the Grand Banks, off Newfoundland to the George's Banks, off Nova Scotia. Deep sea vessels are very sturdily built. Most of them are driven by sails, supplemented by auxiliary power, but some of them are steam driven, having a relatively large displacement of 250 to 300 tons gross.

The fish taken in banks fisheries, says the Montreal Herald, are mainly cod, haddock, hake and pollock, and are caught for the dried fish trade. The long line method is chiefly used. Ten or more dories are usually carried by each boat and these are put to sea with two fishermen in each boat. The long line or trawl has attached to it, at intervals of about six feet, a succession of short lines, each carrying a hook. One of the dory fishermen baits the hooks and pays out the line as the other rows. Sometimes the line reaches a mile or more in length. It is buoyed and anchored at both ends and is allowed to stay in the water for half an hour or so, then hauled in. The dory goes back to the vessel, unloads the fish and repeats the process. These "bankers" sometimes remain in the fishing grounds as long as two months, until a full cargo has been obtained, before returning to the home port.

WHAT PRICE PROFITS?

By

For example, consider the part the NRA "more abundant life" goal has played in the sorry profits-showing of June Railroad earnings:—Figures made public in August showed their volume of business (NRA inspired) and their revenues (ditto) increased, but that the increase in their operating expenses (ditto) was a much larger increase than the increase in revenues. Result, three of the strongest rail issues made new lows for the year on one August morning. So some more money is likely to become a burden, but "capital" will become still more "timid". Already new recruits, a horde of them, have enlisted in the army sniping at the President for the government's interference with business, meaning interference with profits, and the worm-eaten banner "More business in government; less government in business," was removed from its six-year resting place in the mausoleum, dusted off, and blatantly flung to the breeze above a thousand platforms in the recent election campaign. Since the elections, however the boys are pursuing a slightly different tack, though they are still working for the same result. Yet "the more abundant life for all" goal seems still a long way off, and our progress toward it is but at a snail's pace. All of which again proves that you cannot ride two horses going in opposite directions, at the same time.

With bank surplus growing hourly, with bankers complaining that money is a burden and bribing their depositors to come and cart it away, Wm. Green picks the same moment to burst in among his fellow-workers in the American Federation of Labor toiling for ten days in convention at Atlantic City to demand the immediate restoration of the CWA to provide jobs for an estimated ten million still unemployed! Is one dollar of this burden-money available for one unemployed man? Not under the Profit System. The only "good" use, which Banker Nichols declares gives value to money, is, under the Profit System, the making of profits. There are no profits in CWA work. It follows therefore that the burden-money cannot go directly to the unemployed men. It cannot while the Profit System is still alive. So the government must borrow the burden-dollars, guaranteeing the profits to the tired bankers (for the equally tired-depositors), pay it over to the ten million men, employing them at work from which it will not get a dime back. Then, after the burden-dollars have all been paid over to the ten million men, the government must also pay them back to the tired bankers (for the equally tired depositors), and it must also pay these gentry the profits, guaranteed in the first place else the government could not have secured the burden-dollars. The ten million men by this time will again be without work, their money will have again found its niche in the private cash-register of some merchant, there to rest until the guarantee of certain profits again beckons to it to come forth, and another fervid and soul-stirring speech will be due from President William Green of the American Federation of Labor. By this time, too, the tired bankers and the equally tired depositors, more overburdened than before by this added load of profits which the government has presented to them, will doubtless be bordering upon a state of total prostration. But "it's an ill wind that blows" etc., because the mechanical pencil business will again come into its own!

The Profit System is Dead

Since it is now clear that the single hitch in all our best-laid plans can be described in two words, Profit System, why do we hesitate about removing the hitch? What is there Divine? What needful, or useful? Take a good look at it Everyone should be able to see that it's done for. Why can't we be frank about it and admit it out loud? We are like the type of parent who gives the children loaded fire-arms with which to "play bandit," then affect great surprise and wonderment when a youngster is carried in with an eye shot out! Why remain so simple? Or is it we are just pretending to be simple? We see on every hand the tragic results of the Profit System still suffered to remain in force and power long after its ability to function in a normal manner has departed. This fact is pointed out to us and we exclaim wide-eyed, to one another, Clara, Lou, & Em style, "Why! Do you suppose there is r-r-really something wrong with it?" The only thing wrong with it is that for all practical purposes the profit system is deader than Moses!

And despite the facts briefly touched upon in this paper we observe the President and his entire Party all down in the morgue working like supermen, and vainly of course, trying to breathe the breath of life again into the rapidly stiffening form upon the slab—vainly attempting to make the Profit System function as of yore. They do not yet understand that for at least ninety percent of us, it is as extinct as the dodo.

Forty million employed persons are praying only that they may be retained on the job. They are not asking for profits. Ten million unemployed persons are praying only that they be given a job. They are not asking for profits. Thirty million farmers, losing money steadily for more than a decade, are today praying only for production costs. They are not asking for profits. Who is there left? With these eighty million people and their dependents, accounted for, how many of our hundred and thirty million people are holding out for profits? Just how many are still sulking in their tents as they have been for five years, only because the government cannot guarantee them profits? In short, just how many individuals are holding us up?

And since for all save this handful the Profit System is dead, why does Simeon Fess and Manager Fletcher, and two or three other persons, insist that the Republican Party be given a turn at the pulmotor? The Republican Party stood at the bedside from October 1929 to March 1933 and watched the ebbing life, the gasping breath, of the Profit System without so much as waving a solitary fan. What is the idea of its coming around now? And why should the LaFollettes, the Progressives, or any Third Party springing from the loins of the people yearn for a chance, also, at the stiff?

Most important of all, since the universal cry from tens of millions of throats is merely "give us steady jobs at good wages" since outside of a handful of Capitalists no mention is ever made of profits why don't we simply draw the shades, light the candles, (if we are inclined that way), and come up out of the morgue, into the sun-light, and get going?

Mr. Roosevelt paid high tribute to the forest workers and the men who have accomplished so much in the government National Park Service, creating the most beautiful and extensive system of National Parks anywhere on Earth. All done without profits. He could with equal accuracy have cited the State and Federal highways that span the continent. Unexcelled in quality, far over-shadowing all other nations in mileage, they provide another striking example of what the government has done without profits or hope of profits. If the government had owned its own sources of supply, its brick kilns, its cement plants, etc., the record would have been still more imposing. He could with equal truthfulness, have touched upon the far-reaching arms of the United States Postal Service. Here is the biggest business in this or any other country, whose record for speed, accuracy, and efficiency is untouched by any other group of workers whether in private industry or in public service, and this record was made and is steadily maintained by tens of thousands of loyal employees, among whom there is not one individual who is or ever was motivated by the thought of profits!

And so, since the universal cry is for jobs, and NOT for profits why doesn't the government, with its power of eminent domain, with its new and powerful NRA Industrial Emergency Committee, Richberg, Ickes, Perkins, Hopkins, Davis, with the courageous leader in supreme command that Franklin Delano Roosevelt has already a thousand times demonstrated himself to be, and still enthusiastically and whole-heartedly backed by overwhelming majority—the vast masses of "we the people",—why doesn't the government begin answering today this simple and most basic appeal?

THE EVILS OF DRINKING SHOW GREAT INCREASE

By W. G. Calderwood

A year has passed. Every hope that lured the voters to grant John Barleycorn a reprieve has failed.

It was hoped that legal liquor would banish the bootlegger and blindpigger. Richard Choate, Jr., the liquor "czar", acknowledges that half of the retail supply of hard liquor is illicit, and Secretary Morgenthau concedes that the bootleg booze is of better quality than the legal product.

It was hoped that repeal would reduce drunkenness. Official records show that in most cities drunkenness has increased from 10 percent to 1000 percent, that arrests for drunken driving have increased 1.5 percent in Connecticut; 42 percent in Washington, D. C.; 100 percent in Rhode Island; 122 percent in New Orleans; 300 percent in Philadelphia; 380 percent in Cincinnati; 479 percent in Los Angeles, and similarly thruout the nation.

It was hoped that repeal would remove the temptation of drinking from youth and women. Press reports from many of the chief cities of the nation show that women crowd the public bars, and that liquor is freely sold illegally to high school students and even to children from the grades, and that drunkenness and moral delinquency in the teen age has reached proportions never before approached in the history of the Republic.

The voters were assured repeatedly, solemnly and emphatically that the saloon should never, never return. Over 400,000 saloons have been licensed to take the place of the 177,000 closed by prohibition and the evils in the modern saloon beggars all comparison with those of the pre-prohibition era.

The noisy repealers, who loudly protested their abhorrence of the evils of non-enforced prohibition, far from objecting to those same evils now multiplied under repeal seem to enjoy them so hilariously that they are utterly oblivious to the appalling spectacle of youth staggering down the primrose path to destruction.

ARYANS RUNNING AMUCK IN THE GERMAN REICHTAG

Berlin (TIS)—An all time height of Aryan legislation has been reached by a decision of the Reichs' chamber of lawyers, concerning the officially requested dissolution of a prominent German law firm. The partners in this firm are father and son, and the dissolution was ordered on the ground that the father is a non-Aryan (he has a Jewish grandmother) while his son is an Aryan, "since the Aryan rule applies only to the last three generations." It would be unthinkable to concede a partnership between the two under such circumstances, aside from the fact that such partnership between an Aryan and a non-Aryan is expressly forbidden by law.

Santo Domingo City

Comparatively few Americans realize that Santo Domingo City has more historic interest than any other place in the Americas, observes a writer in the Washington Post. It was the first city and capital laid out and constructed by Spaniards in the New world, and was referred to feelingly by the Conquistadores as La Cuna or Cradle of America. The original city was founded by Bartolome Columbus, brother of Christopher on August 4, 1496, on the east bank of the Ozama river, near its mouth. It was named by Bartholome in honor of his father, Domingo Columbus, and the fact that the first stone was laid on a Su[illegible] which was also the day of [illegible] Santo [illegible] to Domi[illegible]

Who's Who

THE phone bell woke me. I answered and heard Ned Kendall's voice demand:

"Say, do you go to bed with ear muffs on?"

"No," I said, "but a clear conscience brings sound sleep. You wouldn't know about that."

He gave a snort of contempt.

"Listen, Bert—I need you. There's an English producer named Sir Wilfred Leigh-Bromley in town, visiting the studios. I'm dated to interview him at nine tonight for a feature story. How about you handling it? Only take a short while. I've got a date."

I thought over my plans. I was to meet Miriam's train at one in the morning. I'd been reminding myself of the day and hour for a week. A man has to be careful to remember when his wife's coming home.

"All right. But why don't you lay off chasing? Some day the Husband's Protective league is going to put ants in your pants."

"Hah! Herbert Saunders, the saint. Man, how I'd love to catch you without your halo some time! Well, thanks for taking the job, anyway. Better use my name; that'll save explanations. He's at the Christine-Plaza. So long."

I hung up, swung out of bed, and started dressing. There was still some tell-tale evidence to be disposed of: bottles to be thrown out and a couple of shirts with rouge-smudged collars for the laundry. Miriam wouldn't be pleased if she found those around. Neither would I.

• • • • • • •

Our table at the Capitol club was in an alcove near the dance floor; we had a good view of the place. Sir Wilfred ordered sparkling Moselle, then said:

"Look here, Mr. Kendall—you're sure this idea isn't a bore to you?"

I said: "Not at all—a pleasure."

"I'm glad. You see, your Hollywood night clubs are quite famous with us abroad. I should hate to have left without even a look at one, and this was my last chance. Shall have to be off tomorrow."

"Yes," he pursued; "back to Elstree and the job. Hope I shall profit some by the immense lot I've learned here. Been trying for a year to manage this visit—ever since my wife came over to appear in your films. By the by, I dare say you know her: Mae Siddon?"

I did, though not as his wife. But I kept surprise from showing.

I don't know when he first saw them.

"Mr. Kendall," he said, "would you verify an impression, please? I believe that's my wife across the floor, dancing with the blond young gentleman?"

I look and saw Mae Siddon clinging tightly against Ned Kendall. They moved a very little to the waltz music. While we watched, they exchanged a kiss. That brought a guttural sound from the Britisher.

"Yes," I told him; "guess it is."

"Rotten little cheat!" said Leigh-Bromley through shut teeth. "Do you by chance know the man, Mr. Kendall?"

I had my mouth ready with the name when I realized the man out there and I couldn't both be Ned Kendall. Then I considered explaining the substitution; but I didn't. It was Ned's mess and he could handle it.

"No," I said, finally; "never saw him before. Sorry."

Sir Wilfred rose. "Well, perhaps I can learn. Excuse me a moment."

The dance was ending as he moved away. I drank some more wine and decided that if Leigh-Bromley came back without his information, I'd spill it after all. Ned had it coming, and I had a reputation as a moralist to maintain.

The producer had been gone about ten minutes when I became aware of the headwaiter, bending over me. He said confidentially:

"Beg pardon, sir; the gentleman who was here entrusted me with a message for you. He had no time to write. He said the lady left her table long enough for him to barge over, posing as an autograph collector, and get the bounder's signature. He said you'd understand."

I nodded and asked if that were all.

"No, sir. He said he must rush off at once to look up his attorney's local agent; there'd be no time in the morning, as his boat sailed at six. He asked me to convey his humblest apologies, sir."

The mention of time reminded me to look at my watch. I jumped up; I had just half an hour to reach the depot and met Miriam. I said:

"Okay—thanks. Wait a minute; here's something for your trouble."

I fished in my pockets, but could find only a twenty and some change. So I told him:

"Come out to the desk and I'll draw you a check."

The waiter purred a grateful phrase and followed me. I made out a check for five dollars and gave it to the man. He began a suave thanks, but it suddenly trailed off. I looked a question at him.

"Pardon me, sir," he said stiffly; "there must be some mistake. You've signed this Herbert Saunders. That was the name of the gentleman who signed your friend's book. I saw it with my own eyes, sir."

Banks Fishing Gets Its Name From Ocean Bottom

Banks fishing gets its name from the banks or hilly portions of the ocean bottom, found between the shore and the deep waters of the Atlantic. The main banks range from the Grand Banks, off Newfoundland to the George's Banks, off Nova Scotia. Deep sea vessels are very sturdily built. Most of them are driven by sails, supplemented by auxiliary power, but some of them are steam driven, having a relatively large displacement of 250 to 300 tons gross.

The fish taken in banks fisheries, says the Montreal Herald, are mainly cod, haddock, hake and pollock, and are caught for the dried fish trade. The long line method is chiefly used. Ten or more dories are usually carried by each boat and these are put to sea with two fishermen in each boat. The long line or trawl has attached to it, at intervals of about six feet, a succession of short lines, each carrying a hook. One of the dory fishermen baits the hooks and pays out the line as the other rows. Sometimes the line reaches a mile or more in length. It is buoyed and anchored at both ends and is allowed to stay in the water for half an hour or so, then hauled in. The dory goes back to the vessel, unloads the fish and repeats the process. These "bankers" sometimes remain in the fishing grounds as long as two months, until a full cargo has been obtained, before returning to the home port.

THERESE knew exactly the charming picture she made. It was, indeed, nothing new for people to gaze at her as Alice Whitley was doing now—with solemn fascination and not a little awe. The other girl moved slightly. Then, in a sudden burst, "I love to look at you, Therese! You're more than just—beautiful. There's something sort of aristocratic about you—you're different from the rest of us here. I always think of you"—earnestly—"as having descended from royalty."

Therese shrugged lightly. "Thank you, but I guess not."

"Well, even if you do seem so—so regal, you're not a bit high-hat with us small-towners. You've been visiting here only two weeks, and already you've got everybody in our crowd crazy about you! Except," quickly, "Gregg Barring, of course."

Therese narrowed her eyes amusedly. "You're quite sure of your Gregg, aren't you?"

"Oh, yes! Why, Gregg's always loved me. And—I, do I adore him!"

"Sometimes," casually, "men tire of a girl, no matter how much they once cared."

"But not Gregg," stanchly.

The bell rang. Therese moved gracefully to the door. 'I'll have to answer. Aunt Cora is out, and it's the maid's day off." She returned with a square purple box. Leisurely she opened it and picked up the enclosed card with only a flashing glance at the violets within.

"Oh, what beauties!" breathed Alice. "And ordered from the city!" noting the smart silver lettering on the cover. "Well, I suppose a perfectly grand invitation goes with them?"

"A drive down to Villa Verona—that new place down the river. Dinner, of course. He's coming at six o'clock."

"Lucky you! Who's the invitation from?" with frank curiosity.

Therese hesitated, then slowly turned the card toward Alice.

There was a moment of appalled silence. "Oh, not—Gregg! Not Gregg!"

"It does happen to be Gregg," evenly. "But—I won't accept."

"Oh, what difference does it make," the other cried, "whether you go or not!" Blindly she made for the door.

"Wait, Alice." The girl fell back listlessly into a chair. Therese hesitated for only a moment while she visioned again the delightful drive with Gregg last night. There had been no lovemaking, but it was impossible to ignore the flame burning between them that might all at once leap into a sweeping blaze. But if she quenched that flame now—

"You're perfectly furious with me, I suppose?" looking suddenly across at Alice.

"No—not with you. You can't help it, I guess, if—if every man in town falls for you."

"Well, then, prove that you do not blame me. Stay and have tea with me, won't you?"

Alice gazed at her dumbly. "If you want me to."

"I certainly do. Now," rising, "I'll bring in the things and you shall see how nicely I can brew tea!" Out in the hall, however, she sped upstairs to her aunt's room, carefully closed the door, and called Gregg Barring's number on the extension phone.

"Thanks for the flowers, Gregg, and the lovely invitation. No, I'm sorry, but I can't accept. A previous invitation. No—listen. Alice is here and knows about—about your flowers, and she saw the card. She's all broken up. Now, this is my plan: I'll keep her here until six o'clock, and then you fix it up with some one to come in your place. Think of some explanation—Alice must never know that it was really you. No, I won't have time to see you again. I'm going home tomorrow. Why so soon? Oh," in a most matter-of-fact tone, "I'm really getting tired of small-town life!"

It was not a very happy tea party, but Alice was still there when a car door slammed out in front. White and tense, she sprang to the window, partially hiding behind a drape. "Why—it's Tom Gregg's brother!" a wild half-fearful hope in her eyes.

Therese raised her slim brows delicately. "Now, what on earth—"

"Hello, Therese! Ready?" A young man stepped into the hall and flashed her an understanding grin.

"But, Tom, it was Gregg's invitation I accepted. He wrote it on his own card."

"What?" He plunged his hand into a pocket, eyed the cards he drew forth and uttered a disgusted, "Well, of all dumbest! Gregg's cards. I must have picked up his case by mistake. Anyway, Gregg's got a girl—thinks the world of Alice!"

There was a swift flurry of feet behind them and an ecstatic, "Hello, Tom! . . . Therese, you see it was all a mistake!" She danced down the cement walk on winged feet.

To the sophisticated city girl, the whole performance had smacked of crude theatrics, but now her eyes followed Alice a little wistfully, in her heart a little pang of regret, of loss. But, too, an odd little feeling of peace.

Numerous Varieties of Bothersome Cockroaches

While there are many varieties of cockroaches belonging to the same family, among which are the German and Australian, the American is the most common and widely distributed species in the corn belt, according to an authority in the Missouri Farmer.

About eleven months' time is required for a cockroach to hatch and grow to maturity. The female lays a number of eggs which she deposits in a brown capsule. This capsule she retains in her body until the young are about ready to hatch, whereupon she deposits it along the run-ways of the insect. When the young hatch they live for a time with the old pair. At night they sneak into kitchen and pantry and track around over the food. They excrete a material over food and in their run-ways that has a foreign, and very offensive, odor. That they are exceedingly filthy and dangerous to human health is obvious when it is known that they eat and track over anything from a dead mouse, a bed bug, an empty egg capsule, to all kinds of human foods.

Charivari, Mock Serenade, Once Used for Newlyweds

Charivari is pronounced Sha-re-va-re, a as in father, e as in end, accent on third syllable, or colloquially as if it were spelled chiv-e-re. It is a mock serenade of a newly married couple. It originated in the Middle ages in France where it was customary to raise the charivari only against persons just married for the second time, says a writer in the Indianapolis News.

Neighbors would gather round the home of the couple, and make a tumultuous noise by shouting, whistling, hissing, groaning, ringing bells, beating tin pans, etc. The crowd, generally in masks and special costumes, would not stop the charivari until the newly married couple bought their peace with a ransom, which usually consisted of food and drink, or supply of money to buy it. The charivari of the rural districts of the United States is similar, except it is raised against any newly married couple. In Germany it is called "katzenmusik," which means "cat's concert."

Desert Yields Precious Stones

Precious stones weighing as much as five pounds have been found in the Libyan desert. They are of a beautiful greenish-yellow color and extremely hard. It is believed that they were formed out of desert sand by the terrific heat of a great aerolite or meteor, which fell long ago in this district. Similar stones have been found around a meteoric crater at Wabar, Arabia. These are supposed to be remains of a broken planet. The crater is similar to the 19 discovered in 1931 in the Central Australian desert, blasted out by giant meteorites. Some of these craters are more than 200 yards in diameter. Scattered around are fragments of the meteorites, composed of pure nickel and iron

RIVER VALLEY COOPERATORS HOLD ENTHUSIASTIC MEET

lieving that their prices are lower than the independent merchants.

Mr. Whitney explained the work and functions of the Central Cooptrative Wholesale, tracing its history since a small beginning of only a small office to the present large wholesale establishment serving several hundred cooperative enterprises and making its purchases of commodities in carlots or more at a time. This institution is owned and controlled by the cooperatives, he said.

Stuart McLeod spoke on the turkey situation this fall, showing how the Land O' Lakes organization held the price up to the producers in spite of the onsloughts being made by the large chain groceries. He cited how the Great Atlantic and Pacific grocery chain had ordered turkeys and when carlots were in transit wired cancellations on their orders thus throwing thousands of pounds of turkeys on the market which they then when they had broken the market, bought at reduced prices and sold over their counters as "specials".

The farmers of the community served lunch at the close of the program.

Mistake

THERESE knew exactly the charming picture she made. It was, indeed, nothing new for people to gaze at her as Alice Whitley was doing now—with solemn fascination and not a little awe. The other girl moved slightly. Then, in a sudden burst, "I love to look at you, Therese! You're more than just—beautiful. There's something sort of aristocratic about you—you're different from the rest of us here. I always think of you"—earnestly—"as having descended from royalty."

Therese shrugged lightly. "Thank you, but I guess not."

"Well, even if you do seem so—so regal, you're not a bit high-hat with us small-towners. You've been visiting here only two weeks, and already you've got everybody in our crowd crazy about you! Except," quickly, "Gregg Barring, of course."

Therese narrowed her eyes amusedly. "You're quite sure of your Gregg, aren't you?"

"Oh, yes! Why, Gregg's always loved me. And—I, do I adore him!"

"Sometimes," casually, "men tire of a girl, no matter how much they once cared."

"But not Gregg," stanchly.

The bell rang. Therese moved gracefully to the door. 'I'll have to answer. Aunt Cora is out, and it's the maid's day off." She returned with a square purple box. Leisurely she opened it and picked up the enclosed card with only a flashing glance at the violets within.

"Oh, what beauties!" breathed Alice. "And ordered from the city!" noting the smart silver lettering on the cover. "Well, I suppose a perfectly grand invitation goes with them?"

"A drive down to Villa Verona—that new place down the river. Dinner, of course. He's coming at six o'clock."

"Lucky you! Who's the invitation from?" with frank curiosity.

Therese hesitated, then, slowly turned the card towardAlice.

There was a moment of appalled silence. "Oh, not—Gregg! Not Gregg!"

"It does happen to be Gregg," evenly. "But—I won't accept."

"Oh, what difference does it make," the other cried, "whether you go or not!" Blindly she made for the door.

"Wait, Alice!" The girl fell back listlessly into a chair. Therese hesitated for only a moment while she visioned again the delightful drive with Gregg last night. There had been no lovemaking, but it was impossible to ignore the flame burning between them that might all at once leap into a sweeping blaze. But if she quenched that flame now—

"You're perfectly furious with me, I suppose?" looking suddenly across at Alice.

"No—not with you. You can't help it, I guess, if—if every man in town falls for you."

"Well, then, prove that you do not blame me. Stay and have tea with me, won't you?"

Alice gazed at her dumbly. "If you want me to."

"I certainly do. Now," rising, "I'll bring in the things and you shall see how nicely I can brew tea!" Out in the hall, however, she sped upstairs to her aunt's room, carefully closed the door, and called Gregg Barring's number on the extension phone.

"Thanks for the flowers, Gregg, and the lovely invitation. No, I'm sorry, but I can't accept. A previous invitation. No—listen. Alice is here and knows about—about your flowers, and she saw the card. She's all broken up. Now, this is my plan: I'll keep her here until six o'clock, and then you fix it up with some one to come in your place. Think of some explanation—Alice must never know that it was really you. No, I won't have time to see you again. I'm going home tomorrow. Why so soon? Oh," in a most matter-of-fact tone, "I'm really getting tired of small-town life!"

It was not a very happy tea party, but Alice was still there when a car door slammed out in front. White and tense, she sprang to the window, partially hiding behind a drape. "Why—it's Tom Gregg's brother!" a wild half-fearful hope in her eyes.

Therese raised her slim brows delicately. "Now, what on earth—"

"Hello, Therese! Ready?" A young man stepped into the hall and flashed her an understanding grin.

"But, Tom, it was Gregg's invitation I accepted. He wrote it on his own card."

"What?" He plunged his hand into a pocket, eyed the cards he drew forth and uttered a disgusted, "Well, of all dumbest! Gregg's cards. I must have picked up his case by mistake. Anyway, Gregg's got a girl—thinks the world of Alice!"

There was a swift flurry of feet behind them and an ecstatic, "Hello, Tom! . . . Therese, you see it was all a mistake!" She danced down the cement walk on winged feet.

To the sophisticated city girl, the whole performance had smacked of crude theatrics, but now her eyes followed Alice a little wistfully, in her heart a little pang of regret, of loss. But, too, an odd little feeling of peace.

Numerous Varieties of Bothersome Cockroaches

While there are many varieties of cockroaches belonging to the same family, among which are the German and Australian, the American is the most common and widely distributed species in the corn belt, according to an authority in the Missouri Farmer.

About eleven months' time is required for a cockroach to hatch and grow to maturity. The female lays a number of eggs which she deposits in a brown capsule. This capsule she retains in her body until the young are about ready to hatch, whereupon she deposits it along the run-ways of the insect. When the young hatch they live for a time with the old pair. At night they sneak into kitchen and pantry and track around over the food. They excrete a material over food and in their run-ways that has a foreign, and very offensive, odor. That they are exceedingly filthy and dangerous to human health is obvious when it is known that they eat and track over anything from a dead mouse, a bed bug, an empty egg capsule, to all kinds of human foods.

Charivari, Mock Serenade, Once Used for Newlyweds

Charivari is pronounced Sha-re-va-re, a as in father, e as in end, accent on third syllable, or colloquially as if it were spelled chiv-e-re. It is a mock serenade of a newly married couple. It originated in the Middle ages in France where it was customary to raise the charivari only against persons just married for the second time, says a writer in the Indianapolis News.

Neighbors would gather round the home of the couple, and make a tumultuous noise by shouting, whistling, hissing, groaning, ringing bells, beating tin pans, etc. ... The crowd, generally in masks and special costumes, would not stop the charivari until the newly married couple bought their peace with a ransom, which usually consisted of food and drink, or supply of money to buy it. The charivari of the rural districts of the United States is similar, except it is raised against any newly married couple. In Germany it is called "katzenmusik," which means "cat's concert."

Desert Yields Precious Stones

Precious stones weighing as much as five pounds have been found in the Libyan desert. They are of a beautiful greenish-yellow color and extremely hard. It is believed that they were formed out of desert sand by the terrific heat of a great aerolite or meteor, which fell long ago in this district. Similar stones have been found around a meteoric crater at Wabar, Arabia. These are supposed to be remains of a broken planet. The crater is similar to the 19 discovered in 1931 in the Central Australian desert, blasted out by giant meteorites. Some of these craters are more than 200 yards in diameter. Scattered around are fragments of the meteorites, composed of pure nickel and iron lieving that their prices are lower than the independent merchants.

Mr. Whitney explained the work and functions of the Central Cooptrative Wholesale, tracing its history since a small beginning of only a small office to the present large wholesale establishment serving several hundred cooperative enterprises and making its purchases of commodities in carlots or more at a time. This institution is owned and controlled by the cooperatives. he said.

Stuart McLeod spoke on the turkey situation this fall, showing how the Land O' Lakes organization held the price up to the producers in spite of the onslaughts being made by the large chain groceries. He cited how the Great Atlantic and Pacific grocery chain had ordered turkeys and when carlots were in transit wired cancellations on their orders thus throwing thousands of pounds of turkeys on the market which they then when they had broken the market, bought at reduced prices and sold over their counters as "specials".

The farmers of the community served lunch at the close of the program.

VOLUME THREE NUMBER 38 THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA. THURSDAY DEC, 27, 1934

OLE BOLSTAD IS HELD UP SUN. BY 2 TRANSIENTS

Men are Apprehended Monday Morning at Erskine By Sheriff

Late Sunday afternoon two men, Samuel Thompson and Robert Pyne who are transents, tied and robbed Ole Bolstad living about 10 miles east of the city ,of $68. After securing the money which Mr. Bolstad had hidden in his trunk, the men hitch-hiked to Thief River Falls and from here they took a taxi to Erskine where they were taken into custody by the Pennington County Sheriff and a deputy just as they were about to board a train for the cities.

Mr. Bolstad, who is 80 years old, said that after they had tied and ropped him they left the doors of the building open and if he had not gotten loose he would have been frozen to death in a short time. Mr. Bolstad managed to get loose and walk to a neighbor's place and call the sheriff but nearly two hours had elasped before he could do so.

The men waived the hearing in municipal court Monday and were taken to Crookston Wednesday morning to be tried before District Judge Montague where the pled guilty of second degree robbery. They were taken to Stillwater to serve out their indeterminate sentences later the same day.

Mr. Thompson, who is 38 years old, and R. Pyne, who is 22 years old, have been working in this vicinity for the past two months; they gave no addresses and so are classified as transients.

If reductions : allowed refunds will be made thru the local office. The old rates for Class T. truck, those used on the farms, will prevail also unless action is taken on them during the legislative session.

THREE MAJOR FIRES START IN 20 HOURS

McLeod Home Burns Wed. O.K. Tire Shop&Fair Blds Burn Tobay

At about nine o clock last evening the home of Stuart McLeod caught fire and a call for help was sent in to the local fire edpartment. Before any assistance could be given the fire was out of control and the building was destroyed. The McLeod place is about four and a half miles NW of the city. As Mr. and Mrs. McLeod reside in the cty they have a family living on the farm, Mr. and Mrs. Geveng; when the fire started they were out doing the evening chores;they rushed to the house and rescued their small children who were already in bed. The fire apparently originated by the furnace in the basement.

The O.K. Tire and Battery Shop, of which Palmer Tommerdal is owner, sent out a call for help to the fire department at about noon today. After the force responded to the call the fire had already gained too much headway to be controlled and at six o'clock today the fire was not yet completely out. The building is very nearly a complete loss according to early reports although a greater part of the furnishings were saved by the firemen. A near tragedy was narrowly adverted by the prompt response to the call as Olga Knudseth, who was napping, was overcome by smoke; she was taken to the St. Lukes' Hospitl where she was given first aid.

New Institute for Governmental Research in State is Organized

Formation of a non-political research institute to assist legislators, state officers, and citizens in solving public problems was announced today by C. L. Ames of St. Paul, its chairman. He states that the organization was practically completed four months ago and extensive studies have already been made as to some of the major problems with which the coming session of the Legislature is expected to deal.

The organization has been named the "Minnesota Institute of Government research". It has offices in St. Paul and has a trained staff headed by Harold L. Henderson as its executive director. Mr. Henderson comes to Minnesota with twenty years of governmental research experience, particularly in the states of Illinois and Wisconsin.

Mr. Ames said that reports on some of the subjects already considered would be made public within the next three weeks. It is proposed that these reports will be sent to each member-elect of the legislature and to each state officer who is concerned with the subject to which any report relates.

Mr. Ames issued the following statement explaining the nature and purpose of the institute:

"The Minnesota Institute of Governmental Research is a fact-finding organization to assist legislators, state officers, and citizens in solving problems of government It is a citizen-supported, non-partisan, non-political research and fact-finding civic organization. It will not deal in propaganda, take part in any political campaign nor endorse or oppose any candidates for public offices.

"The primary purpose of the institute is to assist citizens and officials in obtaining effective state government at a reasonalbe cost The plan is to search out facts about government and to render unbiased interpretations of them Its aim is to co-operate with public officials and to be helpful rather than critical. The institute is staffed so as to assist officials in the installation of accounting systems, budget methods, centralized purchasing, reorganizations, civil service procedure, and other administrative practices.

"The institute was organized in recognition of the ever-increasing complexity of governmental problems. Not only the citizens but legislators and officials are frequently uninformed as to the facts bearing upon public problems with which they must deal. New principles and theories are constantly being injected into government, and some at least, of our time honored principles and theories must be discarded. Each new principle adopted and each old principle rejected will have consequences which will affect all classes of the community. In so far as such consequences can be determined in advance, the danger of mistakes is reduced. It is the aim of the institute to ascertain dependable and unbiased facts bearing upon such problems, so far as time and means permit, and to furnish them to legislators, officials, and citizens.

"The institute is supported and controlled by citizens and has no official connection with the state government. It is directed by a council composed of men who have had considerable experience with governmental problems, namely, Messrs. George W. Lawson, Daniel A. Wallace, Herbert J. Miller, Hugh H. Berber, and Carl P. Herbert in addition to Mr. Ames. Other members are to be added in the near future. Professor Wm. Anderson, Dean Richard E. Scammon and Professor Roy G. Blakey of the University of Minnesota are to act as an advisory committee, giving the council and staff the benefit of their wide experience in many fields of government.

"Research organizations of this type are not novel or original. They have been in existence for over a quarter of a century, spreading to over forty cities, to the national capitol at Washington, and to many Canadian communities, to Tokio, Japan and to China. The extent and solidarity of the research movement are attested by the formation of a national organization called the 'Governmental Research Association with headquarters at Chicago. Similar research organizations which have directed their interest toward city governments have had unusual success.

"The institute is to be a permanent organization, carefully studying the problems of this state, not for a few weeks but every week in the year, year in and year out. Constructive proposals will be prepared from time to time covering many subjects, based on facts, and conclusions will be derived by scientific interpretation of these facts and the best experience and methods of other governmental units throughout the country. It hopes that wastes, duplications, inefficient methods and unbusinesslike practices can be discovered and eliminated, since they strike at the very foundation of representative government."

POLICE WOMAN ON NIGHT SHIFT TALKS

By W. G. Calderwood

Here's a report of an interview with a police woman on a night shift in a city of a half million. When asked how conditions are now as compared with pre-prohibition days, she said: "Conditions, especially for youth, are very much worse than before prohibiton, and indescribably worse than before repeal. Before prohibition there were 408 saloons in the city, restricted to the down town areas, and a few business centers towards the outskirts. The law forbade minors to enter the saloons, and while the law quite generally was ignored, yet there were no attractions that were particularly alluring to youth.

"Now 3.2 beer is legally sold in oved 1700 places, scattered thruout the entire city, close to the schoolhouses, and convenient to residential districts. In them soft drinks and light refreshments are sold, booths provide privacy for patrons and dancing in many cases is free. On top of that there are a few more than 200 night clubs, where 3.2 is legally sold, and in many of the places boys and girls that the proprietor or the bar maids dare trust can buy any kind of drink that they can pay for. Many of the young folks buy alcohol of a convenient bootlegger who has much less to fear now, since hard liquor is elgally available, than before repeal. Food is served in these places and they are open all hours. Many of them are at their worst between midnight and five in the morning, when conditions beggar words."

When asked about students she stated that on Saturday nights the dance floors of some of the night clubs are often packed with boys and girls of student age, and after midnight drunkenness is shocking and sometimes universal. "In these particulars," she said, "the primrose path to perdition seems a hundred times wider and more slippery than before repeal. And, if reports can be credited, moral delinquency and depravity resulting from these conditions have never been hitherto approached. Moreover, the conditions in rural districts are reported to be as appalling as in the city.

TRAVERSE DAM SERVEY IS NEARING COMPLETION

Preliminary surveys being almost finished, three successive steps in the procedure to realize the plans for the Lake Traverse-Bois de Sioux conservation and drainage projects have been outlined by Walter F. MacGregor, director of the works division, Minnesota SERA.

They are: 1—Acquisition of options on flowage rights along the lake; 2—Approval by L. P. Zimmerman, acting SERA director, and 3—Allocation, by the state executive council, of funds to cover the state's shade of the cost.

Since November 1, two crews of surveyors have been busy, one at the north end of Lake Traverse and the other at the south end. These preliminary surveys are nearly completed.

Tentative plans call for the construction of two dykes across the lake, one about four miles south of White Rock, S. Dak., and the other further south, near Brownsville. Minnesota. The dyke at the north end, according to plans, will be about two and one half miles long. 40 feet wide at the top, 124 feet at the base and with an average height of 12 feet. More than half a million cubic yards of dirt would be required for the dam.

Contacts are being made with the SERA officials of South Dakota to insure cooperation between the two states concerned.

BRITSH LABOR BACKS NAZI BOYCOTT PLAN

London—Herbert Morrison, leader of the Labor party in London and most frequently mentioned possibility as next Labor Prime Minister, has pledged the support of British labor to extend and intensify the boycott of German goods "until such time as complete freedom of belief and full civil rights are restored to all Germans without distinction."

LAKE LEVELS AND FISH CONDITIONS IMPROVED

An abundance of fall rains and heavy snowfalls with lakes still remaining open at the time have greatly improved lake conditions in the state and low levels have been materially raised with a direct benefit to fish life, Erling Swenson Director of the Division of Game and Fish, reported. Water levels were so low in many lakes this that promiscuous fishing was permitted that the fish might be taken and utilized for food purposes, Director Swenson said. Counties where lakes were particularly shallow where Watonwan, Fairibault. Lincoln, Freeborn, Lyon, Pope Brown, Murray and Cottonwood.

During the month of November fish rescue work was carried on by commercial fisherman at no added expense to the state. A total of 2,345 game fish were transferred from shallow lakes where there was danger of freezing into lakes where levels were deep enough to sustain fish life. This work was accomplished in Jackson, Martin and Cottonwood counties.

Arrangements have been completed by the game and fish division to equip one unit for fish rescue work and the removal of rough fish where contract fishing is impractical. Necessary trucks, boats seines and rigging have been provided.

Contract fish production has been light during the season between open water and the formation of ice on the lakes. At the present time, according to a report for November, there are 29 fishing contracts in force with 21 of them active. Better fish prices are in prospect during and immediately following the holidays, game and fish offical said.

Members of the Minnesota Conservation Commission are cooperating in every way possible to bring about improved conditions for fish life in Minnesota lakes. Emphasis will be placed on rescue work where needed and on the removal of rough fish to aid game fishes to increase in numbers.

WORK RELIEF CLIENTS ARE PHYSICALLY FIT

Physical examination of work relief clients in 17 Minnesota counties discloses excellent conditions of health and fitness for work, reports C. H. Zealand, director of Minnesota SERA.

The number examined to date 13,406, represents about one-fifth of the total work relief payroll in the state, Mr. Zealand said. The workers were grouped in four classes, as follows: "A"— in condition to perform any kind of hard labor 7,541; "B"— fit only for light physical exerton, 3,789; "C"— able to stand only extremely light work 1,687, and "D"— wholly unfit for work and needing docto'rs cade 389.

Translated into percentages, this places 56 out of every 100 in the "A" class; 28 in the "B" class; and 13 in the "C" class, or 97 percent able to work. Only 3 out of every 100 were found to be unfit for work, and these were referred to the county relief office for medical attention.

The SERA hospital on wheels will continue to carry doctors and nurses from place to place in the state, until every employe on an SERA project has been classified. The purpose is to determine the physical qualifications of every able and to get a complete record of individual for certain kind of work the general health of the delief clients.

WINDSWEPT HOLLANDALE FARMS TO BE RESTORED

Work relief totaling $25,000 has been assigned to 100 Hollandale farmers whose produce gardens were seriously damaged this summer by soil erosion caused by strong winds, it is announced by Walter F. MacGregor, directod of the works division, Minnesota SERA.

In normal years, the Hollandale region yields $1,000,000 worth of garden truck, Mr. MacGregor said. The severe windstorms this summer almost nullified the efforts of the gardeners. Time and again, newly planted crops were blown away by the high winds.

This project will help the sufferers to restore their farms to the former basis of productivity.

A tree planting program is scheduled for the spring to prevent a recurrence of damaging wind erosion, Mr. MacGregor stated.

Minneapolis— The Cooperators' Life Insurance Association was granted a charter by the state of Minnesota, Tuesday, October 2 the 500 initial members were mailed insurance policies immediately and America's new Rochdale Cooperative Life Insurance Association struck out in its long trek to take the exploitation out of life insurance. The formation of the cooperative was projected in the fall of 1932 in the face of America's worst depression and is considered a direct challenge to those institutions which have been reaping tremendous profits on the fear of death.

The Cooperators' Life Association is licensed to operate on a full legal reserve basis under the state fraternal laws and has satisfied the legal requirements to issue all forms of accepted life insurance and to provide this protection on a cooperative basis.

Cooperators' Life will maintain offices in the Sexton Building, Minneapolis.

State Game Wardens Are Active, Dept. Report Shows

With 40 less game wardens this November as compared to a year ago, arrests for game law violations last month showed a big increase over November, 1933, a report by George Weaver, Chief Game Warden discloses. In November this year, 328 arrests were made by state game wardens while last year in November arrests totalled 192. Last year 46 deer were seized in November because of law infractions and this year this figure was increased to 121 deer.

Fines levied last month of game law violations amounted to $5,178 the report stated.

"Record of arrests would indicate that our state game warden force has been exceedingly active or that there has been a marked increase in the number of violators." Mr. Weaver said. "Although November is always a large month in game law violations because of the close of the small game hunting season and the usual big game hunting in even numbered years, this November has surpassed any simiar month in past years, records in the division of game and fish reveals."

Building operations which began August 31 were suspended September 28 to await the outcome of an action in court seeking the removal of the county seat from Foley to Sauk Rapids. When notified by the district court that the move had failed, Mr. Mac Gregor gave instruction to resume work immediately.

HEALTHY CLIMATE WAS STATE'S FIRST ASSET

Minnesota climate was one of its chief assets in early days according to a historical article appearing in the current issue of "Everybody's Health" the state Christmas Seal magazine, written by the state's well known authors, Maud and Delos Lovelace.

"Minnesota as a health resort in the early days" is the title of the article dealing with the high regard founders and early settlers of the state had for the health-giving qualities of Minnesota's "salubrious climate, worth more than mines of gold."

The article states: "Among the motives given for settling in Minnesota, the search for health is mentioned with marked frequency. The remedial restorative climate attracted settlers, not only from the nearby newly settled communities, but from the distant east and south."

Quotations from the press of the early eighteen fifties and from files of the Territorial papers and handbooks of the time preserved in the library of the Minnesota Historical Society, are given in the article. Research work on this subject was done by the Lovelaces for their latest book, "One Stayed at Welcome".

Among the quotations given are: "The atmosphere of Minnesota is clear, dry and invigorating; a natural foe to the blanched cheek, the fevered brow, the chilling ague and the pestilent cholera."

"In St. Anthony are shoemakers, watch makers, carriage makers, cabinet makers, brick makers, harness makers, blacksmiths, painters, tinners, millwrights, stone masons, brick layers, plasterers, merchants, lawyers, doctors—all doing well except the doctors."

The plight of the doctors is again referred to in the passage: "Physicians are great sufferers by this good Minnesota Climate. They are obliged to enter other professions or go elsewhere."

While climate is greatly discounted today in the treatment of tuberculosis. Minnesota is outstanding in its fight against this disease because of its excellent sanatorium system, its intensive program of tuberculin testing of school children, and its general program of prevention and early discovery through education and special health projects, it is pointed out by the Minnesota Public Health Association.

PEACE ON EARTH, GOOD WILL TO MEN

This is Christmas week—a week set aside for thanksgiving and joy— thanksgiving to, and glorification of, the Creator who so richly endowed us, His children,—joy in the return of the Sun and the promise of everlasting life. We should be happy—all humanity should be happy—but we find it hard to rise to the occasion.

Of course, we wish everyone a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year—with all the intensity of our soul—with all the sincerity of our heart—we repeat, "Peace on Earth, Good Will Toward Men." But the spirit refuses to rise.

We see a holly, evergreen, tinsel bedecked Humanity singing Christmas carols and dancing madly around the Golden Calf. A hysterical, gift-buying, gift-gving, gift-exchanging multitude—giving a little and hoping to receive more—marts of trade, Christmas decorated, to attract profits— Santa Clauses on every corner, to draw business—jobless fathers, cursing their impotency—impoverished mothers and hungry children; hungry for food, for warmth, for gifts, for gladness, for love—rich men in furs; magnanimous men, giving a meal from their bounty, but refusing a job—a highstrung, hightensioned, highspeed populace—a back-slapping, back-stabbing, half truthful, much lying people—a maelstrom of jazz, booze, wild women, wild men, wild parties, commercialized vice—commercialized Birthday of the Christchild..

And the man Christ? Thru the maddened multitude he moves, imploring, beseeching; jostled, unheeded, unrecognized, unheralded; abused, vilified, persecuted and prosecuted; betrayed and crucified—in his own name. The Savior of Man? What folly, man does not want to be saved.

We see too, the children; happy children, wide-eyed in eager expectancy as they frolic jubilantly around the evergreen. Thei r enthusiasm is genuine—their hope is untainted—their faith sublime. Joyful children, glorying in the season and its beautiful symbolisms. Verily, of such is the Kingdom of Heaven. They are the hope of the world. God grant that they may carry some of that unbounded enthusiasm—that hope and faith through the years, of disillusionment before them, into the future, to strengthen them and to fortify them in their task. They have a world to rebuild—a race to reclaim—a civilization to save. With faith in the teachings of the Lowly Nazarene whose birthday we celebrate at this season they can do it—without it, they must fail.

WHAT IS YOUR PHILOSOPHY?

Following a talk on legislation and lobbies at a farmers' club meeting sometime ago, we got into a discussion with some of the farmers present, and one of them said, "I've read your editorials right along, and heard you talk tonight, and, just what is your political philosophy anyway?" And did that set us back on our haunches? But the worst was yet to come. The other evening, we mentioned the foregoing incident to some of our friends durng a discussion, and one of them said, "Well, I've been reading your editorials too. And, just what is your philosophy?" (Also you my son Brutus)

And so we have ruminated back through the archives of memories, and wonder if we are not all prone to take many things for granted. Apparently, altho we have labored along fondly believing that we have been expounding a political philosophy, and helping to build an organization for the purpose of bringing about a more orderly and sane social and economic order, even our best friends have failed to recognize the builder , and have seen rather the iconoclast.

For the shattering of idols we beg no apology. Old prejudices must be destroyed if logic and reason is to prevail. Falseness must be uncovered if the truth is to be recognized. Fo r falseness generally hides behind half-truths. If we are to build a new society, we must first convince a majority of the people (for we believe in democracy) that a new order is necessary by tearing the few remaining rags of respectability from the filthy carcass of the present order.

Yet we would of course prefer to be a builder. When we have passed on, if any work of ours is ever deigned worthy of mention, we would much rather have a beautiful structure pointed out and have it said, "Behold his handiwork", than to have a scrap-pile pointed out and have it said, "See how he destroyed a vermin-infested fire-trap," laudable though such destruction may be.

And so, being that the New Year is just in the offing, and this is the popular time for making resolutions, we have resolved that in the future we shall attempt, not only to tear down the outworn, but also to devote more time to building up the new and better structure. So that when another year has rolled around, we can point, to the pile of ruins and in its midst see the formation of the new society and truthfully say ,"We have helped to build it."

And it just struck us that this is the last opportunity we will have of inflicting our opinions on our readers this year. Which probably gives them one more reason for rejoicing.

Old Man Winter finally decided he is all thru foolin' and that it was time to "crack down". Still it would not have been necessary to quite so rough to convince us that he means it.

The Glad Season

This is the season of the year when the memory of an early radical is observed by explaining away his radicalism in supernatural and obscure language. Some say Jesus is a myth—certainly the Jesus of some denominations is. If He was a person, I like to think of Him as a leader of the poor and oppressed, who was crucified for His radical ideas. In those days, any attempt at enlightening the working class was rigorously put down. even as it is today.

In spite of all this, it is impossible not to be glad in this season. We will swallow all the fables handed down from antiquity; we will fall for the gift-custom; we will gorge ourselves on turkey and cranberry sauce: we will go home and meet the relatives and talk things over; the season is an armistice as it were. from the daily war. And for these reasons, we continue with the custom of celebrating the Glad Season.

The American Workers' Museum

A Workers' Museum is being established at Commonwealth College, Mena, Ark., in which it is planned to display articles depicting the increasing poverty of workers and unemployed, increasing extravagance of the wealthy, intellectual and ethical breakdown, greater and greater concentration of wealth, increasing armaments competition between nations, growth of Fascism, etc., etc. The displays will be arranged for a purpose—to show the connection between great poverty and great riches.

This device has been used before but never so forcibly as in Lawrence Stalling's "The First World War", a photographic history of the recent conflagration, arranged ironically to show the utter futility of the workers of one nation murdering the workers of another. The book was a best-seller, even at the high price of $5.00; but now it is barred from certain libraries and is not sold thru certain popular book dispensaries. Why? God only knows. But "The First World War" will be a star exhibit in the new Workers' Museum, as a sign of sanity in the existing order. Stallings was a photographer for a big daily newspaper, which shows that even such know the truth at times.

The Other Side

There is the other side to every question; and in the case of being radical, that there is another side is sometimes heart-rending. There are so few of our friends and relatives on this side.

Maybe the season makes a person mellow and liberal; maybe it's the weather; or maybe it's just something I ate for breakfast—the fact remains, that I can see the point of view of the capitalist class in all its clarity. We have built this thing up, say they, and now that it is crumbling, despite all we can do, we are being hounded from all sides by radicals who thirst for our blood and demand that we abdicate in favor of a workers and farmers government. How can we help that competition forced us to use practices which were not exactly human? How can we help that the practice of having big corporations removed us from all contact with our employees and caused all the dissension and strife of recent years? How can we help that it seems to be written in the stars that we shall fight to the last ditch for our "rights" (which some of us believe now are wrong, but can do nothing about it), and shall prolong our power as long as possible, by dictatorship if necessary?

It is indeed written in the stars. It is all the workings of grim necessity that all these things should happen, and the capitalist is no more to blame for it than the worker is. They are both victims of the system. And since the only rational society is composed of free individuals who live off their own efforts and not off the efforts of others, the capitalist is doomed. It may take long, but the end of exploitation is inevitable. No man can stop the wheels of destiny.

THE U. S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND RECOVERY

Mr. Hoover gathered the mightiest men of his day—the financial and industrial giants—the United States Chamber of Commerce, to his side some five years ago. One and all, singly and in groups, they posed before the News-reels Camera and they all faithfully promised Mr. Hoover their full and complete cooperation to get this country again onto its own feet. More, they said that they could get us out of the depression. After that, at almost monthly intervals for several years, their newspapers told us that we were out! Mr. Ford pledged his entire fortune, so the head-lines of four years ago blazed at us, to that same noble purpose. We all know the result. Then why is it that some people seem to actually take seriously the recent widely publicized statement that this same United States Chamber of Commerce, after having pouted at the New Deal for two years, has now decided to be good and play along with it—that it is going to "cooperate" with Mr. Roosevelt? Heaven save us, if it really does! Nothing else can. And why mention that Mr. Ford claims he is going to build a million cars in 1935? Is our memory supposed to be no good at all? Are we supposed to have entirely forgotten those silly promises of those stupid men, or what?

The Conservation Commission at its meeting last week, endorsed the plan proposed by the St. Louis County Planning Board for promoting the same class of employment within state forests as has been proposed by the Regional Forester for national forests. The federal government also was urged to allocate funds for state forest improvement to relieve the serious unemployment situation. Appearing before the commission in behalf of the St. Louis County Planning Board, George Barrett of Buhl, member of the Arrowhead Rehabilitation association, declared that there were 35,000 men unemployed in St. Louis county alone. The program advocated, he said would provide immediate work for approximately 12,000 persons for from 16 to 20 months, and permanent employment for 5,000 to 6,000 men. The program is one of the forest rehabilitation measures yroposed.

According to latest reports, there are 60,000 persons on SERA work-relief payrolls. These are clients who are working on SERA projects in return for the relief given them. Included are more than 6,000 women, 1,800 in Minneapolis and 1,000 in St. Paul. The men work on such projects as construction, water conservation and flood control and white collar jobs, while the women are engaged in sewing, nursing, library work, and other white collar type projects. The so-called white-collar jobs are those utilizing the previous experience of non-manual workers.

The federal department of labor has, among its innovations, laid plans for an apprenticeship study by various state committees. The purpose of these studies will be to formulate regulations for apprenticeships in the various industries working under NRA codes. It is common knowledge that many firms take advantage of the apprenticeship clauses in their code by keeping skilled workers in the novice class long after they deserve advancement. H. H. Stoll, Minnesota state employment service, has been named head of the Minnesota committee.

In the 28 years that the inheritance tax has been in effect, it has yielded a total of $32,911,243.35, according to the report of the state auditor. The banner year was in 1917, when $2,594,487 was collected.

A wholesome sign that things are looking brighter for people in the Middle West was evidenced by the licensing by the Securities Commission of the sale of stock in a company formed at Moorhead, Minnesota, by a large group of business and professional men and farmers of adjoining territory for th purpose of leasing and purchasing from the state, lands taken over for delinquent taxes. The new company, to be known as Farmers anl Merchants Holding Company, Incorporated, already has leased some thousand acres of land from the state, has purchased tractors and farming equipment, and plans are now fully developed for the breaking up and farming of this land. The objective is to gradually increase the lands acquired as operations continue. Such faith in the future of that part of the state alone is a satisfaction, but in addition there is a situation whereby abandoned lands are reclaimed for farming purposes and placed once more on the tax rolls to the joint benefit to the company and the community at large.

It seems certain that one of the majojr issues before the next legislature will be the question of tax revision. Real property can no longer continue to hold up under the heavy tax load imposed upon it. This fact is realized and appreciated by both liberals and conservatives. The former will undoubtedly attempt a revision on the basis of shifting the tax burden from those who cannot afford to pay to those with ability to pay. There is a concerted drive, however, by certain elements to rush over a sales tax under some other kind of name. If successful, this means that the tax burden will continue to rest on the weak, on the shoulders of the poor. The public must be on guard as never before, for a sugar-coated pill is about to be administered by doctors who have no interest in the welfare of the patient.

Knud Wefald, member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, is in Washington, D. C., attending a meeting called by W. S. Bradley, chairman of the committee on aricultural commodity credits. The committee considers that it is extremely desirable to secure uniform regulation and provisions affecting the issuance of farm warehouse certificates under the various state warehousing laws.

Corn loans were made by the Federal Government to farmers in the various states this year and this method of makng such loans proved so sucesessful that it is the intention of the Federal Government to extend loans to farmers also on varous kinds of grain. In the state of Minnesota, 13,397 loans were made aggregating $5,446,077 on 12,102,394 bushels of corn. The loans were made in this state under the Minnesota Farm Storage Act, the details of which are administered by the Railroad and Warehouse Commission.

MOLEY, MOONEY, AND INSULL

Of what purpose is the plea of Mr. Raymond Moley in his TODAY to Governor Merriam of California to release Tom Mooney. "To give the lie to those, like Sinclair, who indict the justice and common sense of our American institutions," when in the same week that his plea is made, Sam Insull is declared innocent and given his freedom? Cannot Mr. Moley see that all of this is inextricably bound up with this Profit System, that these and a thousand similar cases are but a part and parcel of that same rotten and decadent system?

'NO PATCHING'; OLSON

"I believe the government should devote its efforts to the building of consumers' and producers' co-operatives instead of attempting to patch up the failing Capitalist structure," said Governor Olson in an interview discussing future plans of the Administration. "Down there in Washington they are in a squirrel cage. Everything they attempt to do is based on the Capitalistic philosophy of production for profit instead of production for use."

Two Methods Are Open

Asked how the state could develop production for use plants, the Governor outlined two methods. It is possible either for the state through the legislature to submit a referendum to the people at the next general election, he pointed out, or through the police powers of the state to sell the goods of the unemployed's factories on the open market to provide money for relief needs.

"Incidental" to the safety and welfare of the people the state could take relief money to lease and operate factories and sell the goods upon the open market to pay relief needs, it was explained.

Turning to the immediate future the Governor said that his next job depends upon the policies of the FERA. He refused to disclose the topics he had in mind but said he will definitely know the next step he is to take in preparing for the coming legislative session after his trip to Washington.

F-L and Capitalist Parties

He was asked why it was that the Farmer-Labor party with its opposite political philosophy supported President Roosevelt and the New Deal. "We see eye to eye on social legislation," he replied, "and so far the President has been going to the left. We are in a unique position inasmuch as we are neither allied to nor indebted to the Capitalist structure. With the two old parties it is merely an exchange of gratuities, legislation for campaign funds."

"I will predict one thing, tho," Governor Olson ventured. "Either we will get parity for agriculture or there will be an agrarian political revolt out here in the middle west and I'll be in it."

With a smile he continued, "I wouldn't ask anything better than to be the campaign manager of that political agrarian revolt. Not the candidate, but campaign manager."

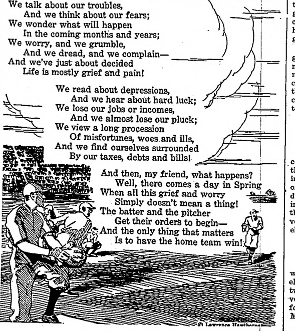
A new legal concept is needed, the Governor said, if something like the Co-operative Commonwealth is to be attained through our form of government. "All our laws are based upon the concept of property rights. All right. Let's enlarge that concept to include the idea that a job is a propeprty right. It is. It is as much property as is income producing land. Our American traditions of government is that every person is entitled to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. We've simply got to modernize that concept to include happiness and a job is as much a right as private property."

Birds Warm Blooded

Birds are much warmer blooded than human beings. Their bodily temperatures range from 100 degrees in the wingless kiwi to from 107 to 111 among sparrows and warblers. Birds with temperatures intermediate between these two classes are the emus and penguins, 102 degrees; and ducks, fowl and game birds, the temperatures of which range from 105 to 107 degrees.

It's a Great Old Game!

BY LAWRENCE HAWTHORNE



We talk about our troubles,
And we think about our fears;
We wonder what will happen
In the coming months and years;
We worry, and we grumble,
And we dread, and we complain—
And we've just about decided
Life is mostly grief and pain!

We read about depressions,
And we hear about hard luck;
We lose our jobs or incomes,
And we almost lose our pluck;
We view a long procession
Of misfortunes, woes and ills,
And we find ourselves surrounded
By our taxes, debts and bills!

And then, my friend, what happens?
Well, there comes a day in Spring
When all this grief and worry
Simply doesn't mean a thing!
The batter and the pitcher
Get their orders to begin—
And the only thing that matters
Is to have the home team win!

HOW GENERAL DAWES "SERVED HIS COUNTRY"

(Labor)

Apparently General Charles G. Dawes, familiarly known as "Hell 'n Maria," has "gypped" Uncle Sam to the tune of $60,000,000. For years the General was hailed as one of the nation's "best minds"—an outstanding figure in business finance and politics. He was chief of the budget, Ambassador to the Court of St. James, and Vice President of the United States. In 1928 he was a serious candidate for the Presidency.

During the closing months of the Hoover administration Dawes quit the diplomatic service and came home to "serve his country" as chief of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In the summer of 1932 he resigned that job, and a few days later returned to Washington to borrow $80,000,000 from the RFC. That transaction was put over at a time when President Hoover was refusing to appropriate a penny to feed the army of hungry, idle workers.

In defense of the Dawes loan the public was assured that ample security had been deposited with the RFC. The falsity of that claim is now revealed, and Federal authorities are suing the stockholders of the old Dawes bank for $60,000,000 still unpaid.

Apparently Dawes was permitted to give the RFC paper of questionable value while he organized a new bank to do business at another stand.

There is nothing particularly surprising about this transaction. This is the same Dawes who many years ago enabled the notorius "Billy" Lorimer to open a bank in Chicago by placing in Lorimer's hands a large sum of money which Lorimer's hands a large sum of money which Lorimer represented to the bank examiners as the property of his institution. After the bank examiners left the money was returned to Dawes and not so long after that Lorimer's bank "folded up," sweeping away the savings of small depositors.

In the face of theLorimer transaction, Dawes was placed in charge of Uncle Sam's strong-box by Hoover, and he naturally helped himself.

THEY HAVE A WORD FOR IT

Farmer-Labor Learder

Scandinavians at home are conceded to be hap-co-operative enterprise. Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden have degrees of economic planning to which their governments give hearty support. And they have localized and nation-wide co-operative businesses of almost every variety.

Scandinavians at home are conieded to be happier, more secure in their economic life, and to enjoy greater individual freedom than any other people. With these facts known it must have been with something of a shock that Scandinavian citizens of Minnesota read in the editorial columns of the St. Paul Pioneer Press of December 8 that—

> When a cohntry goes in for what is now popularly and euphemistically called "economic planning" * * * * freedom of speech, freedom of press, and all the guarantees of indvidual security that exists under a democracy, must be abolished and always are.

Is Sweden ground under the heel of a dictator? Is freedom of speech denied in Norway? Or freedom of the press in Finland? Have guarantees of individual security been torn from the people of Denmark?

On the contrary. The people of these countries, because of their economic plannng and rapid advancement towards a Co-operative Commonwealth, enjoy in special measure the very things Big Business claims to be impossible under such an arrangement.

When facts are turned upside down and white is called black, as in this instance, the Scandinavians have a word for it.

TAXES

Austin American

Michael Cashman, senator-elect of Owatonna, proponent of the gross income tax, has the archaic idea that the tenant population of this state never has payed its share of taxes.

To remedy this "injustice" Mr. Cashman would impose a sales tax. Mr. Cashman owns considerable property. He cannot live on all of it so he must rent some of it. Does Mr. Cashman want to tell the voters of this state that he does not collect enough rent from his property to pay the taxes? If he doesn't, he is unlike 99½ per cent of the property owners of this state.

Tenants do pay taxes, just as surely as do property owners. Instead of paying it directly to the municipality, they pay it to the landlord who turns it over to the governing body because the property happens to be in his name.

One of the surest ways of determining whether a plan is good or bad for the majority is to examine the position and records of its backers. Behind the gross income tax proposal we find the insurance companies, the bankers, the monied men. History has shown that what is good for that class is not good for the working class.

Cashman and men of his ilk are seeking to saddle greater burdens on the small wage-earner, the farmer and the business man, in order that the rich may sneak out with less taxes. The best statement concerning tax distribution yet evolved is that of the Farmer-Labor party which states: "Let the cost of government be borne by those MOST ABLE to pay."

REACTIONARY REPRESENTATIVES

Mille Lacs Times

If the reactionaries succeed in organizing and controlling the next House of the state legislature then we predict that a lot of new faces will appear in that body two years hence. We notice that a lot of new members elected from strong Farmer-Labor district are apparently joining with reactionaries in organizing to oppose progressive legislation. If they join in that kind of thing, they will have some very embarrassing explanations to make in the next election if they run again for office.

OH YEA? AND HOW!

At last we're getting somewhere. Dewey Johnson, who is now acting as a judge in one of the various election recounts, came across a ballot cast in the twentieth precinct of the twelfth ward on which the voter had marked off the names of the candidates for governor and written in as his choice: "The Minneapolis Journal."—D. A. W. in "Off a Reporter's Cuff" in Minneapolis Journal.

Tears Kill Germs

Science rises in impersonality to defend tears, and says of them: Tears kill germs. The secret of tears seems to be a chemical of the class called "enzymes," like the pepsin which aids digestion in the stomach by splitting some of the complicated substances of meat into simple chemicals, which the body can absorb. A new "enzyme" in tears, reported by Dr. Karl Meyer, Prof. Richard Thompson and two associates of the department of opthalmology at Columbia university, seems to have a similar power to split up and dissolve the sticky, gumlike substances in mucus secretions.

Discovery of Bee Trees

Discovery of bee trees in the deep forest depends more upon design than upon chance, hunters for wild honey usually making their discoveries by tracing burdened bees back to their hoarding places, marking the trees for their own and returning at some later time for the raid, with saw or ax, smoke bellows, large knife and containers for golden wealth that may average from 35 to 80 pounds to a tree and sometimes run into the hundreds of pounds. Old-time bee-tree hunters in the Ozarks frequently cut two or three trees a day.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Romans Ruled, Occupied Britain for 367 Years

It is not always realized that the Romans occupied and ruled Britain for 367 years—from A. D. 43 to A. D. 410—a period longer than the time which has passed since the coming of the Spanish Armada, says Tit-Bits Magazine. During those centuries a high civilization was established, the country being opened up by splendid roads connecting many walled cities. In the Undercroft of All Hallows church—the home of Toc H—near the Tower, may be seen an interesting model of London as it was in the Fourth century. There, too, is an actual portion of the floor of a Roman shop of the time of Boadicea, A. D. 59.

Portions of the Roman wall, pierced by six gates—Aldgate, Bishopsgate, Cripplegate, Aldersgate, Newgate, and Ludgate—still exist near the thoroughfare called London Wall. The Roman bridge across the river was situated about 200 yards lower than the present London bridge, and the Tower of London was erected by William the Conqueror at the point where the wall left the river. Most of the country outside the walls was forest or marsh.

Ludgate led the citizens to the settlement of Westminster, where there was a ford across the Thames, and, on the way thither, south of the present site of St. Clement's church, was a Roman bath, still to be seen, and still fed by its original spring water.

Britain's King's Silver Jubilee From the Bible

There have been a number of occasions when a Silver Jubilee could have been celebrated in observance of a sovereign's accession to the throne, says the Montreal Herald. The last was in 1862, when Queen Victoria completed her first 25 years as monarch. But the death of the prince consort just six months before the anniversary made any special rejoicing out of the question.

Kings whose Silver Jubilee could have been celebrated were George II, George III, and Henry VIII. In all three cases there were reasons which would have made public celebrations rather inappropriate.

The idea of the jubilee comes to us from the Bible. The Hebrews used to keep every fiftieth year as a year of jubilee, and the Roman Catholic church took over the idea by instituting years of remission, during which plenary indulgence might be obtained by pilgrimage to Rome and by other works of piety. The intervals between these jubilee years have varied from time to time.

Tottering Pyramids

Chichen-Itza means in translation "The Mouth of the Wells of the Itza Tribe," and in the meaning of this short name, notes the Boston Herald, is embodied the keynote to the whole panorama of a decayed civilization which reared monumental white limestone buildings covered with carvings of the god of rain and water whom the Mayans worshiped, and of the serpent god whom they feared. In its name this bygone city succinctly tells why it became the queen of all the stone metropolises that dotted Yucatan in the empire of a thousand years ago, a city of wells and water, and the ceremonial and cultural center of a race whose descendants now only look upon these tottering pyramids, gleaming in the hot Mexican sun, and dream idly of the grandeur of their ancestors.

Indian Is Given Credit for Discovering Oyster

Cleopatra set the fashions in the days of the Roman empire. However, history leads us to believe that Caesar planned the menus. Humming bird tongues on toast were used sparingly, but the "ostrea" was plentiful and highly prized among the Romans, writes Dorothea Duncan, in the Washington Post. The "ostrea" in English-speaking countries is an oyster. Sallust (86-35 B. C.), after returning from a jaunt to England with Caesar, said he could find only one good thing in the Britons; "they ate oysters."

The Greeks had a word for oysters, too—"ostrean." The word means bone or shell. The French took the term and changed it to "oistre" and from this our word oyster is derived.

An Indian is given the credit for discovering the oyster in America. One day he was fishing and seeing a peculiar looking "stone" in the water, stretched out his hand to it. The oyster shell closed on his finger. He smashed the shell from his hand with his tomahawk, put his finger in his mouth and discovered the delicious flavor of the oyster.

Oysters were so popular in early England that they featured in the social customs of the country. In the midlands, at Christmas, oyster suppers were given.

First Permanent Settlements

The exact dates and places of the first permanent settlements in the 13 original states are often difficult to determine, as authorities differ. The following are generally accepted: Connecticut, Windsor, 1633, English; Delaware, Wilmington, 1638, Swedes; Georgia, Savannah, 1733, English; Maryland, St. Marys, 1634, English; Massachusetts, Plymouth, 1620, English; New Hampshire, Portsmouth, 1623, English; New Jersey, Elizabethtown, 1617, Dutch; New York, New York, 1613, Dutch; North Carolina, Albemarle Sound, 1653, English; Pennsylvania, Chester, 1638, Swedes; Rhode Island, Providence, 1636, English; South Carolina, Ashley River, 1670, English; Virginia, Jamestown, 1607, English.

Drowned in Wine

One of the few "wine executions" in history took place in London in 1478. After George, the duke of Clarence, had been sentenced to death, his brother, King Edward IV, graciously permitted him to choose the manner in which he wished to die. The duke asked to be drowned—in good liquor. So on the day of his execution he was officially tossed into a large cask of Malmsey wine.—Vincent Rafferty, Methuen, Mass., in Collier's Weekly.

Where Iodine Comes From

About 90 per cent of the world's iodine is produced by Chile. This drug is a by-product of the nitrate industry. Twenty years ago Chile supplied 75 per cent of the total volume of nitrogenous fertilizers of the whole world, but because of synthetic processes carried on in the United States and Europe, this proportion has shrunk to 15 per cent.

Daniel Boone's Hair Was Pulled Out by Indians

In 1769 what is now Kentucky was an unexplored wilderness, and Daniel Boone was hired by a syndicate of Virginians and Carolinians to lay the course of empire westward into a land which he described as being thick with buffaloes. He thus became [illegible] pathfinder in the mighty [illegible] observes a writ[illegible] And th[illegible] ed" by [illegible] tucky and [illegible] frontiersman's employers, for 14,000 British pounds—in money and trade goods. Boone, at the head of some thirty stalwart axmen, cut the Great Wilderness road through from Kentucky to the East, where, in his tracks, the wheels of the empire builders were to leave their ruts. And the first important settlement became, in Boone's day, Boonesborough, on the site of Transylvania fort, built by Boone.

Daniel Boone was considered by his contemporaries "an instrument ordained by God to settle the wilderness." But most of his settling was done with a rifle; he was, in fact, for most of the settlements, a one-man defense against the Indians, and, it appears, an effective one. During the Revolution, Indian forays against the settlers, frequently led by British officers, were repulsed time and again by Boone and his pioneers. In 1778 a party led by Boone on a salt-hunting expedition was captured by Indians and taken to Detroit. All save the leader were exchanged or ransomed. A Shawnee chief took a fancy to Boone and adopted him. The ceremony of adoption consisted in pulling out all of his hair except a thick scalplock.

Alabama's Capital

Montgomery is the economic capital of Alabama's fertile "black belt"—extending across the state from east to west—a highly productive strip of land so ideally suited to the boll weevil that the farmers have been forced to turn to other crops. Formerly the region was devoted almost entirely to cotton raising; now Montgomery is a center for a growing cattle and dairying industry, and its fertilizer, lumber, cotton seed oil and cotton mills, have given it a new economic importance. Since 1920 it has increased in population from about 40,000 to nearly 70,000. At the outbreak of the Civil war it was merely a cotton center of about 15,000 people.

Outlet for Trinidad Cocoa

On the far northeast corner of Trinidad, cut off from the rest of the island by the rugged mountains of the Northern range, lies the seaport village of Toco—outlet for much of the produce of the vast cocoa and coconut estates situated in that part of the colony—a self-sufficient hamlet. Many residents of Toco have never been as far from home as Port-of-Spain, or seen a train or tramcar. On the other hand, a large percentage of Trinidadians have never seen Toco, and practically no visitors at all ever get that far afield, although the drive there is one of the most beautiful and interesting in the island.

Neat Ship Surgery

A neat trick in ship surgery was done by England during the war, when two destroyers of the same class—the Zulu and the Nubia—bumped into mines and were damaged beyond repair, the former losing her bow and the latter her stern. So they were cut in half and the good bow of the Nubia was welded to the good stern of the Zulu, and the "new" ship was named Zubian.—F. T. Bell, Glenside, Pa., in Collier's Weekly.

Ludgate led the citizens to the settlement of Westminster, where there was a ford across the Thames, and, on the way thither, south of the present site of St. Clement's church, was a Roman bath, still to be seen, and still fed by its original spring water.

Britain's King's Silver Jubilee From the Bible

There have been a number of occasions when a Silver Jubilee could have been celebrated in observance of a sovereign's accession to the throne, says the Montreal Herald. The last was in 1862, when Queen Victoria completed her first 25 years as monarch. But the death of the prince consort just six months before the anniversary made any special rejoicing out of the question.

Kings whose Silver Jubilee could have been celebrated were George II, George III, and Henry VIII. In all three cases there were reasons which would have made public celebrations rather inappropriate.

The idea of the jubilee comes to us from the Bible. The Hebrews used to keep every fiftieth year as a year of jubilee, and the Roman Catholic church took over the idea by instituting years of remission, during which plenary indulgence might be obtained by pilgrimage to Rome and by other works of piety. The intervals between these jubilee years have varied from time to time.

Tottering Pyramids

Chichen-Itza means in translation "The Mouth of the Wells of the Itza Tribe," and in the meaning of this short name, notes the Boston Herald, is embodied the keynote to the whole panorama of a decayed civilization which reared monumental white limestone buildings covered with carvings of the god of rain and water whom the Mayans worshiped, and of the serpent god whom they feared. In its name this bygone city succinctly tells why it became the queen of all the stone metropolises that dotted Yucatan in the empire of a thousand years ago, a city of wells and water, and the ceremonial and cultural center of a race whose descendants now only look upon these tottering pyramids, gleaming in the hot Mexican sun, and dream idly of the grandeur of their ancestors.

Indian Is Given Credit for Discovering Oyster

Cleopatra set the fashions in the days of the Roman empire. However, history leads us to believe that Caesar planned the menus. Humming bird tongues on toast were used sparingly, but the "ostrea" was plentiful and highly prized among the Romans, writes Dorothea Duncan, in the Washington Post. The "ostrea" in English-speaking countries is an oyster. Sallust (86-35 B. C.), after returning from a jaunt to England with Caesar, said he could find only one good thing in the Britons; "they ate oysters."

The Greeks had a word for oysters, too—"ostrean." The word means bone or shell. The French took the term and changed it to "oistro" and from this our word oyster is derived.

An Indian is given the credit for discovering the oyster in America. One day he was fishing and seeing a peculiar looking "stone" in the water, stretched out his hand to it. The oyster shell closed on his finger. He smashed the shell from his hand with his tomahawk, put his finger in his mouth and discovered the delicious flavor of the oyster.

Oysters were so popular in early England that they featured in the social customs of the country. In the midlands, at Christmas, oyster suppers were given.

First Permanent Settlements

The exact dates and places of the first permanent settlements in the 13 original states are often difficult to determine, as authorities differ. The following are generally accepted: Connecticut, Windsor, 1633, English; Delaware, Wilmington, 1638, Swedes; Georgia, Savannah, 1733, English; Maryland, St. Marys, 1634, English; Massachusetts, Plymouth, 1620, English; New Hampshire, Portsmouth, 1623, English; New Jersey, Elizabethtown, 1617, Dutch; New York, New York, 1613, Dutch; North Carolina, Albemarle Sound, 1653, English; Pennsylvania, Chester, 1638, Swedes; Rhode Island, Providence, 1636, English; South Carolina, Ashley River, 1670, English; Virginia, Jamestown, 1607, English.

Drowned in Wine

One of the few "wine executions" in history took place in London in 1478. After George, the duke of Clarence, had been sentenced to death, his brother, King Edward IV, graciously permitted him to choose the manner in which he wished to die. The duke asked to be drowned—in good liquor. So on the day of his execution he was officially tossed into a large cask of Malmsey wine.—Vincent Rafferty, Methuen, Mass., in Collier's Weekly.

Where Iodine Comes From

About 90 per cent of the world's iodine is produced by Chile. This drug is a by-product of the nitrate industry. Twenty years ago Chile supplied 75 per cent of the total volume of nitrogenous fertilizers of the whole world, but because of synthetic processes carried on in the United States and Europe, this proportion has shrunk to 15 per cent.

Daniel Boone's Hair Was Pulled Out by Indians

In 1769 what is now Kentucky was an unexplored wilderness, and Daniel Boone was hired by a syndicate of Virginians and Carolinians to lay the course of empire westward into a land which he described as being thick with buffaloes. He thus became [illegible] pathfinder in the mighty [illegible] observes a write[illegible] And th[illegible] ed" by [illegible] tucky and [illegible] frontiersman's [illegible] ployers, for 14,000 British pounds—in money and trade goods. Boone, at the head of some thirty stalwart axmen, cut the Great Wilderness road through from Kentucky to the East, where, in his tracks, the wheels of the empire builders were to leave their ruts. And the first important settlement became, in Boone's day, Boonesborough, on the site of Transylvania fort, built by Boone.

Daniel Boone was considered by his contemporaries "an instrument ordained by God to settle the wilderness." But most of his settling was done with a rifle; he was, in fact, for most of the settlements, a one-man defense against the Indians, and, it appears, an effective one. During the Revolution, Indian forays against the settlers, frequently led by British officers, were repulsed time and again by Boone and his pioneers. In 1778 a party led by Boone on a salt-hunting expedition was captured by Indians and taken to Detroit. All save the leader were exchanged or ransomed. A Shawnee chief took a fancy to Boone and adopted him. The ceremony of adoption consisted in pulling out all of his hair except a thick scalplock.

Alabama's Capital

Montgomery is the economic capital of Alabama's fertile "black belt"—extending across the state from east to west—a highly productive strip of land so ideally suited to the boll weevil that the farmers have been forced to turn to other crops. Formerly the region was devoted almost entirely to cotton raising; now Montgomery is a center for a growing cattle and dairying industry, and its fertilizer, lumber, cotton seed oil and cotton mills, have given it a new economic importance. Since 1920 it has increased in population from about 40,000 to nearly 70,000. At the outbreak of the Civil war it was merely a cotton center of about 15,000 people.

Outlet for Trinidad Cocoa

On the far northeast corner of Trinidad, cut off from the rest of the island by the rugged mountains of the Northern range, lies the seaport village of Toco—outlet for much of the produce of the vast cocoa and coconut estates situated in that part of the colony—a self-sufficient hamlet. Many residents of Toco have never been as far from home as Port-of-Spain, or seen a train or tramcar. On the other hand, a large percentage of Trinidadians have never seen Toco, and practically no visitors at all ever get that far afield, although the drive there is one of the most beautiful and interesting in the island.

Neat Ship Surgery

A neat trick in ship surgery was done by England during the war, when two destroyers of the same class—the Zulu and the Nubia—bumped into mines and were damaged beyond repair, the former losing her bow and the latter her stern. So they were cut in half and the good bow of the Nubia was welded to the good stern of the Zulu, and the "new" ship was named Zubian.—F. T. Bell, Glenside, Pa., in Collier's Weekly.

Swans Mate for Life and Share Responsibilities

Swans are perfect models of conjugal conduct. They mate for life and the sexes share the domestic responsibilities, notes a writer in the New York Herald Tribune.

The downy young when first hatched are not the "ugly ducklings" of popular belief, but lovely little creatures, clothed in silky, golden down and without the exaggerated neck and huge paddle-like feet of their parents. Very soon, however, these characteristics begin to appear and ungainliness replaces their natal loveliness until the grace and beauty of maturity appear.

Geese, like swans, pair for life, and the young birds remain in the company of their parents for nearly a year after they are hatched.

Endowed with keen intelligence and extreme wariness, they can be depended on to maintain a fair degree of abundance as long as adequate wintering grounds are afforded them. But, above all, they, like swans, require freedom from molestation when they are at rest, so that a large measure of solitude and wide spaces are the chief requirements for their perpetuation.

Ducks, for the most part, are very different from swans and geese in their family habits. While they pair like other birds, and are not as a rule polygamous, the male in most species is not a constant husband and abandons the female and all family cares as soon as incubation of the eggs is well under way. Stiff-tailed ducks, however, are notable exceptions to this rule.

Genghis Kahn, Mongol Boy Ruler, Suffered Reverses

A boy ruler who suffered great reverses in his early days, to recover and by his conquests change the history of most of Asia and a large portion of Europe, was Genghis Khan, Mongol emperor. Born in 1162, observes a writer in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, he became ruler of a powerful group of Mongol tribes when he was thirteen years old, succeeding his father. Several tribes dispersed when the boy became their head, and for years he struggled to maintain his position, by subduing disaffections and overcoming the hostilities of neighboring tribes. He was constantly at war until 1206, by which time he had built up his strength enough to proclaim himself emperor of Mongolia. He then shattered the forces of his strongest enemy on the Mongolian steppes, overran the Chinese empire, marched south and conquered large portions of what is now Turkey and Persia and India, and drove back the Russians in Georgia. He died in 1227 while successfully extending his control in China, the head of one of the largest empires the world has known. But the empire fell apart on his death.

Empire of the Mayans

At about the time of Christ the early or southern empire of the Mayans first began to become an entity in what is now Guatemala and the east coast of Yucatan, says the Boston Herald. This region is dotted with mounds of ruins, discovered and undiscovered, and often as not covered with trees and vegetation so as to be almost untouched, the remains of once flourishing cities. From about 200 to 650 A. D. this southern empire was in its affluence. The buildings of this period are magnificent, but do not attain the scale, the elaboration of design and number of rooms that characterized the late empire of the North. The hieroglyphs on the lintels and stelae are more elaborate than those of Chichen-Itza, however.

Johnson was engaged in the task of going through the pockets of those in the smoking room who were sleeping when J. Graham, of Lancaster and a CCC worker enroute to his home for the holidays woke up and discovered that some of his personal property was missing and called the police. Missing articles from a number of those present in the waiting room were found on Johnson.

Languages of the World

Including all of its various dialects, Chinese is spoken by about 400,000,000 persons and is the most used language. Various languages are spoken in India, Hindustani being used by some 100,000,000. English is the second most commonly used language, spoken by some 1[illegible]5,000,000; then Russian with 140,000,000; German, 110,000,000; French, 70,000,000; Portuguese, 60,000,000; Japanese, 53,000,000; Spanish and Italian, each 50,000,000; [illegible]. Florence Nightingale

One of the world's greatest statisticians, says Doctor Walker, was Florence Nightingale. Few people realize that the Lady of the Lamp started her nursing career by pestering the British admiralty with facts and figures in carefully planned graphs of needless death and suffering on the battlefield. Without her statistical ability the world might never have learned of the angel of mercy. In her day she was called "the passionate statistician." She became thoroughly hated by the government before she was given the opportunity to become universally beloved.

Living Stone

Living stone is a term applied in sculpture to stone in its native or original position as contrasted with marble or granite which has been quarried. The Lion of Lucerne in Switzerland, the Confederate Memorial on Stone mountain in Georgia, and the Rushmore Memorial in South Dakota are among the famous pieces of sculpture carved from living rock.

Cost of Engraving Stamps

The Post Office department says: "The cost of engraving a new postage stamp is from $300 to $500, depending on the size of the stamp and the amount of detail work. However, the department is reimbursed many times for this expense through the sale of the new stamp to collectors. Therefore, every new stamp issued is a source of profitable revenue to the government."

Termites Everywhere; Do Much Damage Every Year

It has been estimated that termites, tiny ant-like insects that feed on wood, annually damage buildings to the extent of millions of dollars, asserts a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

Termites, sometimes improperly called white ants, are prevalent in practically every section of the United States. They live in colonies just beneath the surface of the ground and commute daily to their cafeteria, which is your house. They feed with gusto on foundation posts, siding, joists, walls, studs or wood flooring that may be handy. The flavor of the inner portion of wooden members seems most to their liking, since they bore into the wood, leaving the surface intact, thus escaping detection.

Persistent and resourceful creatures, if they find no wood in direct contact with the ground, they will often blaze a trail through poor mortar joints in old foundations and build tunnels up the inside wall to reach the wood, which they completely destroy in time.

It is easy to determine whether termites are present in a building by simply examining the outside of the foundation. Tiny dirt tunnels, which may appear to be soil washed up on the masonry, reveal the trail of these destructive insects.

Moon Is Blamed for Many Impossible Afflictions

The idea that the moon upsets wireless programs would be more in keeping with its old reputation than the discovery of its usefulness to fishermen. For most of the things our ancestors believed about the moon were pretty unpleasant, says Answers Magazine.

They thought, for instance, that to sleep in the moon's rays was to invite blindness or other troubles, and coined the word "moonstruck" to describe those who were mentally deranged. "Lunatic" also comes from the Latin word meaning moon.

And while they also believed in the moon's influence on fish, their view was much more pessimistic than that of the fisheries experts. They thought that at certain times the moon made fish unfit for food. The moon, in short, was regarded with a good deal of suspicion. Perhaps this was partly due to its association with black magic and paganism. The witches believed that the herbs which they used in their incantations, or from which they brewed poison to kill their enemies, had to be gathered while the moonbeams fell on them.

Birds Trained to Catch Fish

The cormorant, measuring when mature about 3 feet long and 5 in extent, easily trained when young because of their remarkable intelligence, an expert diving bird, is trained and employed in Japan to catch fish.

Gjesdahl, Crookston, treasurer; Arvid Wickstrom, Strandquist, financial secretary; and Herman A. Kjos, Thief River Falls, recording secretary. The union has about 15,000 members in Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa and Wisconsin.

Heating Government Buildings

Practically all government-owned buildings in the District of Columbia which come under the supervision of the national park service are heated from a central plant. In some of the buildings rented by the government, heat is furnished from independent plants within the respective buildings.

Mt. Shasta's Peak

Mt. Shasta's peak is the crater of an extinct volcano. Scientists say the last eruption occurred many thousand years ago. However, after all these centuries, steam and hot fumes rise continuously from the crater. At times food may actually be cooked by merely setting the pans on the ground. A meal may be warmed in a few minutes in this manner—and this just a few feet from snow and ice banks 30 feet deep. The Indians say in whispers that the summit of Shasta is the tepee of their ancient chief, mighty Isasta, for whom the mountain is named, and that the heat at the crest is kept for the day when he will return once more to be the head of many braves.

"Little Peter"

The little Mother Carey's chicken, or "storm-petrel," is a small bird and sooty black save for a large white patch at the base of the tail. Its habit of pattering with its feet on the water as it flies is familiar to mariners, who in consequence, likened its action to that of the Apostle Peter, who, we are told, walked upon the water, and hence the name petrel, French "Peterelle," meaning "Little Peter."

Chicken Feather Buttons

Making buttons from chicken feathers is possible as the result of finding that the feathers may be dissolved in caustic soda and after several processes hardened into a new plastic material.

Manx Cat Is Not Always Born Without the Tail

The animal known as the Manx cat is not a separate species, but a variety of the house cat, says the Montreal Herald. Its principal peculiarities are unusually high hips and a very short tail. A similar variety is said to exist, or formerly did so, in the Crimea. The tails of animals are in general a highly variable part of their anatomy, especially as to length, and this is true of cat genus (Felix). The length of an animal's tail depends on the number of vertebrae it contains, ranging from none at all in the great apes, rabbits and so forth to 46 in a pangolin.

Among the cats those which, like the lion or tiger, pass their lives on the ground have the longest of these appendages, while the smaller, tree-climbing cats show shorter ones as a rule. The Manx cat has only three caudal vertebrae, and its sacrum (the solidified end of the backbone, of which the tailbones are a continuation) has become shortened. Another characteristic of this breed is that the hinder part of the body is elevated. Manx cats, however, are not invariably tailless; here and there one is born which is provided with a token that he is not wholly a freak; and, curiously, white Manxes are almost unknown and black ones are extremely rare.

Pillar Box Sign Gained Fame for the Inventor

There are many ways of becoming famous, writes the Paris correspondent of the London Sunday Observer. That earl of Sandwich who first ate meat between two pieces of bread put his name into every mouth, and the Parisian printer, of English extraction, who set up upon the pavements those round constructions, three times as wide as a London pillar box and twice as high, and used them for the display of theatrical advertisements which were illuminated at night from the under-edge of a projecting circular roof, not only established what has become one of the most characteristic features of the Paris landscape, but made his name live.

For these pillars were for many years, and sometimes still are, called "collennes Morris." It is more than fifty years since the first of them made its appearance.

Theodore Roosevelt was sworn in at the home of his friend, Ansley Wilcox, on Delaware avenue, Buffalo N. Y., on September 14, 1901, by District Judge John R. Hazel. Jaboticaba Tree Exhibit

The curious Jaboticaba tree, native of the southern states of Brazil from Rio Grande do Sul to Minas Garaes, is represented by an exhibit in the hall of plant life at Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago. This strange tree has delicious grape like fruit which grows abundantly in small clusters directly from the thin back of the trunk and large branches. In South America the Jaboticaba tree is cultivated as well as growing wild over a large area. The globular fruit has a tough and rather thick skin inclosing a juicy vinous pulp and one or more large seeds.

Mathematical Ability

Rare mathematical ability is not always dependent on education. Some prodigies have been illiterate, others have known nothing of the principles of mathematics. Johann Dase (1824-1861), the greatest mental mathematical marvel in history, had no understanding of the fundamentals of mathematics, yet he could multiply two 100-figure numbers in his head in a very short time.—G. P. Elliott, Arlington, Calif., in Collier's Weekly.

Affect Man's Health

Meadow mice affect man's health. They are the natural hosts of the dog tick which is the bearer of the virus causing the dreaded Rocky Mountain spotted fever. The young tick must attach and feed upon the blood of a mouse before it can mature and attach itself to a dog or to man. Without the mouse the tick could not complete its life cycle.

Teeth of Animals

The male horse has 40 teeth and the mare only 36 as a rule. Mature cattle have 32 and a dental pad against which the cutting teeth on the lower jaw work. Sheep and goats also have 32 teeth and a dental pad, but a mature hog—in line with his reputation as an eater—has more than the others—44, including four tusks or tushes.

A Noisy Cricket

A species of cricket found in Sicily is said to be capable of making a noise that can be heard a mile away.

The Pants She Panted For

The will of a man who died in a suburb of London contained this bequest to his wife: "One pair of trousers, as a symbol of what she wanted to wear in my lifetime, but could not."

Hard Work Not Praised

Throughout the Bible, with the exception of only a few contradictory passages, there is no praise for hard work, writes G. R. Turner in the Kansas City Times. Even when Genesis was written, work was already regarded as a curse that had befallen man because of his disobedience. Jesus, himself, according to Gospel writers, did little work but lived instead on the gifts of devoted women (Luke 8:1-3). He commanded his disciples to live like beggars, in preference to the material rewards that spring from work well done. And to his followers he advised consideration of the birds and lilies of the field, which neither sow nor reap but are cared for by their Heavenly Father.

Local Police Takes Youth On Pickpocket Charge

Early Sunday morning Jerome Johnson was taken by the local police on the charge of picking the pockets of persons who were waiting for the north bound train at the Soo Depot while they were sleeping.

Johnson was engaged in the task of going through the pockets of those in the smoking room who were sleeping when J. Graham, of Lancaster and a CCC worker enroute to his home for the holidays woke up and discovered that some of his personal property was missing and called the police. Missing articles from a number of those present in the waiting room were found on Johnson.

A hearing was held Monday and Johnson was bound over to district court under $500 bond.

Languages of the World

Including all of its various dialects, Chinese is spoken by about 400,000,000 persons and is the most used language. Various languages are spoken in India, Hindustani being used by some 100,000,000. English is the second most commonly used language, spoken by some 174,000,000; then Russian with 140,000,000; German, 110,000,000; French, 70,000,000; Portuguese, 60,000,000; Japanese, 53,000,000; Spanish and Italian, each 50,000,000; [illegible] 50,000,000. These are the estimates made by Whitaker's Almanac which gives the number of different languages spoken in the world as about 5,000.

Florence Nightingale

One of the world's greatest statisticians, says Doctor Walker, was Florence Nightingale. Few people realize that the Lady of the Lamp started her nursing career by pestering the British admiralty with facts and figures in carefully planned graphs, of needless death and suffering on the battlefield. Without her statistical ability the world might never have learned of the angel of mercy. In her day she was called "the passionate statistician." She became thoroughly hated by the government before she was given the opportunity to become universally beloved.

Living Stone

Living stone is a term applied in sculpture to stone in its native or original position as contrasted with marble or granite which has been quarried. The Lion of Lucerne in Switzerland, the Confederate Memorial on Stone mountain in Georgia, and the Rushmore Memorial in South Dakota are among the famous pieces of sculpture carved from living rock.

Cost of Engraving Stamps

The Post Office department says: "The cost of engraving a new postage stamp is from $300 to $500, depending on the size of the stamp and the amount of detail work." However, the department is reimbursed many times for this expense through the sale of the new stamp to collectors. Therefore, every new stamp issued is a source of profitable revenue to the government.

Termites Everywhere; Do Much Damage Every Year

It has been estimated that termites, tiny ant-like insects that feed on wood, annually damage buildings to the extent of millions of dollars, asserts a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

Termites, sometimes improperly called white ants, are prevalent in practically every section of the United States. They live in colonies just beneath the surface of the ground and commute daily to their cafeteria, which is your house. They feed with gusto on foundation posts, siding, joists, walls, studs or wood flooring that may be handy. The flavor of the inner portion of wooden members seems most to their liking, since they bore into the wood, leaving the surface intact, thus escaping detection.

Persistent and resourceful creatures, if they find no wood in direct contact with the ground, they will often blaze a trail through poor mortar joints, in old foundations and build tunnels up the inside wall to reach the wood, which they completely destroy in time.

It is easy to determine whether termites are present in a building by simply examining the outside of the foundation. Tiny dirt tunnels, which may appear to be soil washed up on the masonry, reveal the trail of these destructive insects.

Moon Is Blamed for Many Impossible Afflictions

The idea that the moon upsets wireless programs would be more in keeping with its old reputation than the discovery of its usefulness to fishermen. For most of the things our ancestors believed about the moon were pretty unpleasant, says Answers Magazine.

They thought, for instance, that to sleep in the moon's rays was to invite blindness or other troubles, and coined the word "moonstruck" to describe those who were mentally deranged. "Lunatic" also comes from the Latin word meaning moon.

And while they also believed in the moon's influence on fish, their view was much more pessimistic than that of the fisheries experts. They thought that at certain times the moon made fish unfit for food.

The moon, in short, was regarded with a good deal of suspicion. Perhaps this was partly due to its association with black magic and paganism. The witches believed that the herbs which they used in their incantations, or from which they brewed poison to kill their enemies, had to be gathered while the moonbeams fell on them.

Local Union No. 13 of the Independent Union of All Workers was organized at the court house in Thief River Falls, December 2, at a meeting of state highway employees f Minnesota Mantainance District No. 5, which is composed of seven counties of Northwestern Minnesota. The district union headquarters will be in Thief River Falls, while the home office of the organization is at Austin, Minnesota.

Gjesdahl, Crookston, treasurer; Arvid Wickstrom, Strandquist, financial secretary; and Herman A. Kjos, Thief River Falls, recording secretary. A director from each of the seven counties in the district, comprising a board of directors will be elected at the next regular meeting of the organization. The union has about 15,000 members in Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa and Wisconsin.

Heating Government Buildings

Practically all government-owned buildings in the District of Columbia which come under the supervision of the national park service are heated from a central plant. In some of the buildings rented by the government, heat is furnished from independent plants within the respective buildings.

Mt. Shasta's Peak

Mt. Shasta's peak is the crater of an extinct volcano. Scientists say the last eruption occurred many thousand years ago. However, after all these centuries, steam and hot fumes rise continuously from the crater. At times food may actually be cooked by merely setting the pans on the ground. A meal may be warmed in a few minutes in this manner—and this just a few feet from snow and ice banks 30 feet deep. The Indians say in whispers that the summit of Shasta is the tepee of their ancient chief, mighty Isasta, for whom the mountain is named, and that the heat at the crest is kept for the day when he will return once more to be the head of many braves.

"Little Peter"

The little Mother Carey's chicken, or "storm-petrel," is a small bird and sooty black save for a large white patch at the base of the tail. Its habit of pattering with its feet on the water as it flies is familiar to mariners, who in consequence, likened its action to that of the Apostle Peter, who, we are told, walked upon the water, and hence the name petrel, French "Peter-elle," meaning "Little Peter."

Chicken Feather Buttons

Making buttons from chicken feathers is possible as the result of finding that the feathers may be dissolved in caustic soda and after several processes hardened into a new plastic material.

Manx Cat Is Not Always Born Without the Tail

The animal known as the Manx cat is not a separate species, but a variety of the house cat, says the Montreal Herald. Its principal peculiarities are unusually high hips and a very short tail. A similar variety is said to exist, or formerly did so, in the Crimea. The tails of animals are in general a highly variable part of their anatomy, especially as to length, and this is true of cat genus (Felix). The length of an animal's tail depends on the number of vertebrae it contains, ranging from none at all in the great apes, rabbits and so forth to 46 in a pangolin.

Among the cats those which, like the lion or tiger, pass their lives on the ground have the longest of these appendages, while the smaller, tree-climbing cats show shorter ones as a rule. The Manx cat has only three caudal vertebrae, and its sacrum (the solidified end of the backbone, of which the tailbones are a continuation) has become shortened. Another characteristic of this breed is that the hinder part of the body is elevated. Manx cats, however, are not invariably tailless; here and there one is born which is provided with a token that he is not wholly a freak; and, curiously, white Manxes are almost unknown and black ones are extremely rare.

$10,000 DAMAGE AT FAIRGROUND LAST THURSDAY

Fire Department Hindered By Lack of Water in Fighting Blaze

Acccording to Leonard Hanson, Fire Chief, the fire which destroyed the barns at the Pennington County Fair Grounds last Thursday night was probably caused by spontaneous combustion. The barns were filled with seeds and hay being placed there in storage by the Thief River Falls Seed House. The damage was estimated at about $6,000 loss for the Seed House an about $4,000 to the County Fair association. Three buildings were destroyed, all of which were connected in a V.

The fire which destroyed the OK Tire and Battery Shop was reported last week as having been cause by the explosinon of a stove. However, an affidavit executed this week by the occupants, states that there was no stove in the apartment, it being steam heated. The occupants further state that the fire was caused by sparks from the chimney which was not apparently around a stovepipe hole in the chimney which was not apparently tightly sealed.

Survey for Spring Work on Mud Lake

"Work on the 75,000-acre Mud Lake restoration project in northwestern Minnesota with the aid of federal funds is assured this spring as soon as the weather will permit," E. W. Youngdale, engineer for the division of game and fish said. Surveys of the areas are now practically completed, according to Mr. Youngdale.

Members of the Minnesota Conservation Commission are cooperating with officials of the United States Bureau of Biological Survey in pushing the project to as early completion as possible.

"Mud Lake is a great breeding ground for migratory waterfowl," John R. Foley, commission chairman pointed out. "It once had the three requisites for waterfowl existence. Prairie grasses offered the highest type of nesting cover, and many nearby lakes and potholes formerly offered unlimited food and security. Isolation was sufficient with natural enemies few and casual. Man and weather have combined to destroy the conditions which once attracted wild waterfowl by the thousands.

We are gratified that this area is being included in the Wild Life restoration program of the National government, Mr. Foley stated.

Farm Price-Fixing Is New Bulletin Topic

Why farmers keep on producing after prices have fallen far below production costs and why it is difficult to fix farm prices on a cost basis, are points discussed in a new University Farm publication, special bulletin 166, "Cost of Production and Price," by Dr. George A. Pond of the division of agricultural economics.

Certain fundamental characteristics of farm costs explain the slow response of farm production to changes in the balance between cost of production and prices. These same characteristics make difficult the fixing of prices on a cost basis, says the bulletin. The content of the publication is indicated by the topic headings, which follow: What is cost-of-production?; Farm costs contain indirect or non-cash items; Fixed investments in farming are large; Biological nature of farm production prevents quick shifts; Large part of farm costs are fixed items; Costs vary greatly from farm to farm; Uncertainty as to future retards adjustment; Exact costs are difficult to compute; and Individual farm adjustments are too small to affect the market.

Dr. Pond's subject is rather technical, but his presentation of it is said to be strikingly clear and effective, making this bulletin one that thinking farm people and others interested will enjoy studying. Copies are free from county agents, high school agriculture men, or from the bulletin office, University Farm, St. Paul.

Farmers of Northern Counties Re-Located

A transfer of 300 households from isolated farmsteads in Roseau and Lake of the Woods counties to fertile lands selected for them by the rural rehabilitation division, Minnesota SERA, in a move involving the expenditure of $730,000, is being undertaken thru the joint efforts of the SERA and the regional office of the land policy section of the AAA.

These farm families are withdrawing from non-productive lands in the Beltrami Island forest unsuited to agriculture, reports R. I. Nowell, regional AAA director, Madison, Wisconsin. This organization plans to purchase 50,000 acres in this forest area with the ultimate purpose of enlarging it to cover 400,000 acres. The cost will be about $350,000.

All details in connection with the exodus of these families are handled by the Minnesota SERA, it is stated by Dr. R. W. Murchie, director of the rural rehabilitation division. Whatever can be salvaged in the demolition of the old homes will be moved to the new locations. Conditions there offer to the farmers economic independence in a few years. No compulsion is employed in bringing about the migration.

A beneficial result of the move from these sub-marginal lands will be the saving of more than $25,000 annually to Roseau and Lake of the Woods counties. There will no further necessity for maintaining schools, and roads in this section which lies far away from the paths of general travel. All federally-owned lands in this district were recently closed to homestead entry by executive order of President Roosevelt.

In addition to the 50,000 acres to be purchased by the AAA, probably 85 percent of the remaining lands still in private ownership in the area will revert to the state in the next few years as tax delinquent.

J. W. Taylor, of Roseau, and A. D. Wilson of Guthrie, will act as project supervisor for the SERA and the AAA, respectively.

LOCALS DEFEAT R.L.F. 5 TO 2 ON NEW YEARS

Hockey Team Shows Promise Of Becoming Title Contenders

The opening hockey game of the season found the Thief River Falls team in pretty good condition and enabled them to send the Red Lake Falls sextet home on the short en of a five to two score. A rough and fast game was played by both teams and judging by the form displayed, the northwest should have a very good team representing it in the state tournament next spring, should either of these teams win the regional contest.

Red Lake Falls started off at a fast pace and scored a goal late in thefirst period but were unable to find the net again until late in the third and final period. The locals scored twice in the second frame and three times in the third by playing a brand of hockey tha would be considered good late in the season. The scoring thrusts were flashes which indicated that after a few more games they will become formidable opponents for ny team.

Starting for the locals were Berling, Gulrud, Williams and Lindberg, tho every man showed up to good advantage.

Higginbotham, goalie for the locals was badly injured when he was struck by the puck in the second period sustaining a bad gash above the left eye. He was unable to finish the game and a substitute was run in.

Henry Ford Spends Nearly 20,000,000 In Past Ten Months

In his desire to create employment by reviving industry, Henry Ford will still further expand and improve his 1000 acre River Rouge plant, it was announced this week.

Three months ago addition of two steel mills and power units was announced and contracts totaling nearly $12,000,000, embracing this program, have already been let and the materials are coming into the Rouge plant by trainloads almost daily, the announcement states.

In the space of 10 months, Ford will have spent approximately $20,000,000 in the expansion and further development of the River Rouge plant.

Benefits from this huge undertaking have already made themselves felt all thru the Eastern half of the United States, the announcement states, and with the letting of the new contracts still more benefits should be noticed.

1935 Corn-Hog Contracts Explained At Meeting in Minneapolis Dec. 20-21

Provisions of the 1935 corn-hog adjustment contract, and the plan of presenting it to farmers were explained to state extension workers and state corn-hog committee men of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, the Dakotas and Montana, in a conference at Minneapolis on December 20 and 21.

These workers, in turn, will explain the program to the county agricultural agents and county corn-hog committees of their respective states, who will conduct the educational and sign-up work of the program in their respective countes. In Minnesota, the producer meetings will probably not begin until some time after January fifteenth.

The 1935 contract consists of a single sheet, printed on both sides, and a suppplementary booklet containing 34 administrative rulings. In general, it is similar to the 1934 corn-hog contract, except in the following respects:

1. The yield on which the corn adjustment payment will be based will be the ten-year average yield of all land on the farm which has been planted to corn at least once during the past five years. The corn adjustment payment under the 1934 contract was based on the ten-year average yield of the particular piece of land actually retired from corn productoin.

2. The 1935 contract permits the producer to use the land he shifts from corn for producing any crop except corn. The 1934 contract placed many restrictions on the use of the contracted acres.

3. The 1935 contract requires the producer to reduce his 1935 corn acreage only ten percent from the average acreage he planted to corn in 1932-33. The 1934 contract required at least a 20 percent reduction from the same base acreage. In 1935, as in 1934, the producer may, if he wishes, reduce his acreage as much as 30 peprcent for which he will receive a payment.

4. The 1935 corn adjustment payment wll be 35 cents a bushel on the appraised yield per acre, as compared with 30 cents a bushel in 1934.

5. The signer of the 1935 contract is required to reduce the number of hogs he produces for market from his 1935 litters only 10 percent from the average number he produced for market from his 1932-33 litters. The 1934 contract required him to reduce his production 25 per cent from his 1932-33 base. The 1935 contract signers will be permitted to buy an unlimited number of feeder pigs from other corn-hog contract signers, but will be restricted in buying feeder pigs from non-signers to the average number he bought in 1932-33.

6. The 1935 hog adjustment payment will be $15 a head on the number of hogs reduced (10 per cent of the base production). The 1934 payment was at the same rate per hog reduced, but because of the larger reduction required, the total adjustment payment received by each contract signer in 1934 was larger than it will be in 1935. To offset this difference, the 1935 contract signer will have a larger number of hogs to market.

7. Farmers signing the 1935 corn-hog contract will be eligible to take part in any government corn loan program that may be adopted in 1935.

GIVE SNOW PLOWS RIGHT OF WAY ON ROAD IS WARNING

"Don't dispute the right of way with a snow plow", is the warning of the state highway department in an appeal to motorists to exercise unusual caution when meeting plows at work on the trunk highways.

"Drivers will save themselves much inconvenience and some danger if they will make it a habit to slow down or stop when they meet a plow", says a department bulletin. "They should pull as far to the side of the road as possible and give the snow plow the right of way.

"In order to throw snow from the highways and keep them open for public use, it is necessary for the big V plows to travel 25 to 30 miles per hour and maintain a steady pace. They cannot dodge, jump or stop for every approaching car if they are to do an effective job.

"Many pleasure car drivers will approach a plow without slackening speed, expecting the plow to get out of the way. When it does not, they try to turn out at the last moment, but are going so fast they run into the ditch. If these drivers would slow down and turn out for the plow, they would seldom have any difficulty. Snow plows carry blue lights for night warnings."

Emergency Education Faces Fund Shortage

A standstill threatens the emergency education division unless larger sums are appropriated by the FERA, warns Dr. Herbert Sorenson, emergency eduation director, Minnesota SERA.

The division received a federal allotment of $42,400 for the month of December, and 650 teachers are now engaged in adult education work. There are still about 8,000 unemployed teachers in Minnesota, Dr. Sorenson said.

Not a single county possesses an adequate number of instructors and in many counties the staffs set up for the emergency education programs are less than 50 percent of the number demanded.

Dr. John G. Rockwell, state commissioner of education, made a futile attemot in Washington to raise the emergency education budget for the Minnesota SERA, Dr. Sorenson pointed out.

SERA Tree Planting Program To Begin

Plans for the Minnesota extension of the federal shelter belt proposed from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico have reached the stage of actuality by the establishment of government nurseries in Anoka and Marshall, it is announced by Dr. R. W. Murchie, director of rural rehabilitation of the Minnesota SERA.

The 2,000,000 seedlings placed at the disposal of Minnesota by the federal government will not suffice. Therefore, private agencies must be depended upon to furnish the balance of trees needed.

The SERA is prepared to go ahead with the tree planting in the spring as soon as the drouth-killed wood lots have been cleared, and dead timber removed from devastated windbreaks. Projects in undergrowth clearing have been approved for relief fuel purposes, one half to be retained by the land owners, and one half to be distributed to the needy.

Labor will be recruited from work-relief employes. The plan will permit farmers, to whom four million dollars of SERA funds have been advanced, to pay the loans with labor on their own farms.

State and federal organizations are cooperating with the SERA in the program. The U. S. Forest service and the University of Minnesota experimental farm will furnish technical aides to supervise the planting of the seedlings. Dr. Raphael Zon, director of the Lake States Forest experimental station, is in charge of the project as chief advisor. He will be assisted by Parker Anderson, extension forester, University experiment station.

According to estimates by E. P. Sheridan, forestry supervisor of the rural rehabilitation division, more than 3,800,000 acres of wood lots and windbreaks have been destroyed by drouth in 17 counties, where the work will be initiated. These counties are: Big Stone, Chippewa, Douglass, Grant, Kandiyohi, Lac Qui Parle, Lincoln, Lyons Morrison, Pipestone, Pope, Stevens, Swift, Todd, Traverse, Wilkins and Yellow Medicine.

The forest rehabilitation work work will gradually be extended to parts of bordering counties, wherever drouth-killed tres are found.

Federal Drouth Aid Service is Curtailed

Minnesota farmers requiring a livestock relief allowance in excess of $25.00 monthly will henceforth be referred to the Farm Credit administration in accordance with federal rules, it is announced by L. P. Zimmerman, acting administration, Minnesota SERA.

This will result in the removal from the SERA rolls of perhaps one-fourth of the farmers now receiving livestock aid. It also holds out hope of survival to feed merchants, who will benefit by the SERA livestock relief program.

According to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, only farmers with subsistence herds are entitled to assistance from the SERA. A $25.00 a month maximum stock feed allowance is held by Washington authorities to be sufficient. Farmers having larger herds may borrow from the nearest unit of the Farm Credit administration, and buy their own supplies.

Under the new alignment, individual cash orders will be issued for feed relief, as is the case with other necessities. A client can buy his stock feed where he chooces, and allotments will be made on a monthly basis.

Livestock relief managers will be responsible to the respective county relief administrators and cooperate with the drouth committees named by the state department of agriculture.

The new method will supplant the hitherto prevailing practice of furnishing stock relief from various SERA feed distribution centers. However, when a shortage of feed occurs in a locality, or prices advance disproportionately, the local drouth agencies of the AAA may request the SERA to establish feed depots of its own, as before.

T. F. Mattson, who served as director of livestock relief, with the SERA division of rural rehabilitation, has severed this connection. He returned to his former position with the state department of agriculture, from which he had taken a leave of absence.

STATE WIDE SPORT PROGRAM STARTS

The starting signal has been given for the state-wide winter sport contests arranged by the recreational division, Minnesota SERA, it is announced by J. W. Crossett, state athletic director.

About 60,000 male sports enthusiasts will compete in four branches; Hockey, speed skating, basketball and volleyball. Women are not eligible for any of these events.

Speed skating contests are held in three classes: Senior men, 220, 440, and 880 yards; Intermediate boys, 220, 440, and 1,320; and Junior boys, 220, 440 and 880 yards. Winners in these will be determined on a point basis.

Competition is under way in 8 designated regions, each made up of a number of districts. District winners are to be pitted against one another in the regional games. The survivors in these will meet in the state finals.

District play-offs in hockey and speed skating must be completed by January 26th, and the regional games before February 2. District tournaments in basketball and volleyball must be ended by February 23, and the regional games before March 2.

VALLEY LIVESTOCK BREEDERS TO BE HONORED AT SHOW

Leading dairy and general livestock breeders in each of the thirteen Northwestern Minnesota counties will receive special recognition as a feature of the silver anniversary of the Northwest School Farmers' Week and Red River Valley Winter Shows to be held February 4 to 8.

Ono progressive dairy breeder and one progressive livestock breeder, that is, a breeder of either beef cattle or sheep, or hogs, will be selected from each of the valley counties. The selections are to be made in the respective counties by livestock breeders as outlined by the local agent or local leader in counties without agents. These honor breeders will attend the Red River Valley Livestock Breeders' banquet during Winter Show week and be presented with attractive placques which will become their permanent property.

The Red River Valley Dairymen's association of which C. M. Pesek is secretary is presenting the placques to the dairy breeders, and the Red River Valley Livestock Breeders' association, O. M. Kiser, secretary, is presenting the placques to the general livestock breeders.

According to Superintendent A. A. Dowell, president of the Winter Shows board, remarkable progress has taken place in livestock production during the past quarter of a century. This has been due in no small part to the hundreds of livestock breeders scattered throughout the Valley counties. It is highly fitting that these breed improvers be recognized during the silver anniversary celebration.

RECORDS TO BE ASHAMED OF

There are some records being hung up by the state of Minnesota that we have small reason to be proud of. According to Washington reports this state pays a larger sum into the federal treasury via the booze tax than any other of the states that voted for repeal.

According to statistics issued by the federal government this state also holds the unenviable record of having the highest automobile accident rate. According to the figures compiled, our accident rate has increased about three hundred per cent since the advent of legalized beer and booze. These records are not mere coincidences. They tell a story of moral depravity brought on by the damnable liquor control law passed by the special session of the legislature a year ago and it is well to remember that the Farmer-Labor party at that time attempted to put on the statute books a state dispensary law which would take the profits out of liquor. We might also remind the people of the fact that Governor Olson at that time requested such a law and asked the legislature, if it could not see its way clear to pass this law, that it at least submit the question to the people with a constitutonal amendment. The state dispensary bill was killed and the governor's request ignored by the Dunn crowd, or in other words, the W. I. Norton gang that has ruled to ruin this state for the past twenty years and is now trying to organize the House of Representatives, partly with stolen seats.

The state of Minnesota is "on the spot" in regard to liquor control, and it remains for the people who still value human lives and the fair name of our state higher than liquor profits to take drastic action to curb this traffic in human lives.

The state dispensary (without profit) plan is the only plan that has not been tried—and if the liquor evil cannot be curbed by that method, the country will be forced to go back to prohibition again.

We believe that the Farmer-Labor Association should again get behind the state dispensary bill. A year of the present kind of "liquor control" is enough to convince any thinking person that it does everything but "control" the liquor traffic.

HAVE THE EXPERIMENT STATIONS QUIT BUSINESS?

It is reported that the Rural Credit Bureau set aside experimental plots in various parts of the state during the past season for the purpose of experimenting with the production of high quality seed potatoes. According to the report, Mr. Arens, the Conservator, is quoted as saying that the project was launched to raise the standard of Minnesota seed potatoes which have been forced to the background by a superior product from other Northwest states.

Certainly the interest in high quality seed potatoes exhibited by the Rural Credit Department is to be commended. However, laudable as the ambitions of the department in regard to Minnesota seed potatoes may be, it seems to us that the department is stepping out of its sphere when it begins to conduct experiment stations. If we recall corrrectly, the legislature in passing the law creating the office of Conservator, did so with the idea of taking steps to liquidate the bureau and get the state out of what had developed into a bad mess with as whole a skin as possible. It would appear that the department should devote all of its time and energy to the business assigned to it and leave the experimentation with seed production to the Experiment Stations of which we have several, the University Farm and the Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food. At the last report we received these agencies were still functioning and they are in so much better position to do the experimenting.

Reports from Washington this week state that bids are being called for the construction of the long-awaited Thief River Falls post office building. We are sure that the news will be very welcome to the unemployed of the city, and it is to be hoped that construction will be started without delay.

However, we are unable to stir up a great deal of enthusiasm over the building that is to be constructed, and have a feeling that we are not getting our just due. We understand that the new structure is estimated to cost somewhere around $45,000, and knowing something about federal construction costs we suspect that this will mean a smaller building than we should have a right to expect. It seems rather strange that with the continually expanding activities of the federal government, a building is not constructed that will house something more than the post office. There is every reason to believe that sometime in the future, a federal court should be located in Thief River Falls. It is at the present time the district headquarters of the NRS and with the advent of the proposed new public works program other activities should be located here. Unless all signs fail, the government will in the near future have to take over the banking business of the country. Therefore, it seems to us that it would have been the part of wisdom to have put up a larger building than the present plans call for.

Maybe Uncle feels that since we couldn't use a $15,000 gift to enlarge our power plant, that we have an inferiority complex and do not expect to outgrow present requirements.

Here we are at the bottom of the column again and we plumb forgot our resolution about explaining our political philosophy. Well, it can't be helped for this week, it would be just too bad to discard all the swell stuff up above. But watch out for next week—we can feel a powerful article coming on.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

The above well known title to a song of other years is quite suggestive at this time. We are at the beginning of repeal. "Where do we go from here? Do we go back to the drunkenness and corruption engendered by the sale of liquor, as in former years? It is owing to what we are, where we shall go. If you belong to either old parties you are pledged in your platform which route you will take, in making your wet destination. It is up to you what laws you make, you have won and the entire responsbility of where you go, is in your hands.

"Soviets On Parade"

Russia in all its new glory—a militant spirit in place of the old miltarism (there is a difference)—every man, woman and child behind the New Idea—SOVIETS ON PARADE, a motion picture shown at the Sons of Norway Hall last Thursday night, fulfilled all expectations and gave the small but enthusiastic audience a distinct thrill. The new picture-technique employed throughout the film was perhaps confusing to some, but to others the effect was stupendous. The camera-eye moved from whirling wheels to marching workers, from pounding pistons to crowd-scenes, with startling rapidity. The opening scene—two terrific dynamite explosions—symbolized the Russian revolution. It was an upheaval, devastatng to the old order, giving birth to a new.

Over there, although we hear rumblings of discontent (perhaps magnified greatly by the capitalist press), there is a plan, and the greater part of the people are behind it. Confidence in their public officials is almost universal.

Over here, we hear more than rumblings of discontent (which are not mentioned at all in the capitalist press, or only feebly), there is no plan, and we are distrustful of all public officials, especially those in charge of the federal government.

The contrast is too great to pass unnoticed.

Growth and Decay

Last summer Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana had an article by Corliss Lamont, entitled "On Understanding oSviet Russia," read into the Congressional Record. Lamont listed five standards of judgment: (1) we must take into consideration Russia's geography, cultural background, and history; (2) in making comparisons between Russia and other countries we must do so on a relative, and not on an absolute basis (3) we must bear in mind the cultural achievements of the Soviet Union (reducing illiteracy from 70 percent to 10 percent etc,); (4) we must realize that external and internal difficulties have made it necessary to make compromises and shifts in policy from time to time; (5) we must also realize that any proper evaluation of the Soviet Union must take the future into account,—that no sensible person expects the Soviet Union to be a Utopia as yet, and that full socialism will not be attained for some time.

The big point of Lamont's article is that Russia's problems are problems of Growth, while the problems of the rest of the nations of the world are those of Decay. "The eventual aim is a more real and complete democracy than has ever been known in the world before. . . ."

Recognition

After finishing his fine explanation of the five standards of judgment for the Soviet Union, Corliss Lamont mentions the fact that Czarist Russia refused to recognize the United States for 33 years after the break with England. "It is well to recall that the Americans of our own revolutionary era, like the Russians of today, had a rather hard time of it for awhile."

The Lundeen Bill

H. R. 7598, "The Workers' Unemployment and Social Insurance Act," introduced by Congressman Lundeen of Minnesota, provides for insurance for all workers and farmers unemployed through no fault of their own, in amounts equal to average local wages. Funds for this insurance would be raised by taxing individuals and corporation incomes of $5,000 per year and over; and compensation would not be less than $10 per week plus $3 for each dependent. Payment would be made for all time lost on account of sickness, accident, old age, maternity, or part-time work.

Although under the present system the workers and farmers get it in the neck, eventually, no matter what plan is attempted for their benefit, we recommend the Lundeen plan in place of any plan dependent on a sales tax for raising funds. The blame for unemployment should be placed as nearly as possible where it belongs; no Townsend plan would come near leveling the great injustice done by the profiteers to the working class of this country. We urge every worker and farmer to support the Lundeen Bill.

A Traffic Victim Every 35 Seconds

Every 35 seconds, night and day, every day in the year, a person is injured in an automobile accident in the United States, according to the Traffic Safety Manual just published for school use by the safety division of the Minnesota Emergency Relief Administration. The men, women and children killed every year in traffic accidents equal in number the combined populations of the cities of Rochester and Brainerd, or more than 30,000.

POLITICAL DIGEST OF '34

By Howard Y. Williams
National Organizer, League for Independent Political Action and Farmer-Labor Political Federation

A political audit of 1934 indicates that our country has made some progress, while the world as a whole has slipped backward during the year. Looking first at the dark side of the ledger for the United States, we see that we have entered the sixth year of the depresson with business activity almost at its extreme depth, with income tax returns indicating that wealth is increasingly flowing into the hands of the few rather than into the pockets of the many.

At least ten millions are still unemployed. Millions more are on part time work. Drouth has impoverished whole areas. The C. W. A. was largely discontinued and discouraged thousands. The sales tax was imposed in some twenty states and further impoverished the poor. Continued non-enforcement of the 7A clause of the NRA hurt labor. The disclosure of the Fascist plot by General Smedley Butler, the vicious methods used to defeat Upton Sinclair, the organization of the Liberty League, the freeing of the Insulls, and the decisions of the Supreme Court refusing to exempt students in land grant colleges from compulsory military training on religious grounds, all point to dangerous tendencies that might lead to dictatorship.

Balancing ths dark picture, we find on the favorable side of the ledger, that the country is moving steadily towards a more progressive viewpoint. In the November election the voters repudiated the conservative Republican party for the second time. Such old-guard leaders as Senators Fess, Reed, Hatfield and Congressman Britten were retired. Progressives like Senators Holt and Schwellenbach were reelected. The Middle West epitomized this trend when the new Progressive Party captured Wisconsin, the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party was successful running on a radical public ownership platform, the Farmer-Labor Party of Iowa was launched and made a good beginning, and Farmer-Labor Political Federations were organized in Montana, North Dakota South Dakota and Kansas for the purpose of organizing Farmer-Labor Parties in those states for the 1936 campaign.

The tremendous vote secured by Upton Sinclair in California was a victory in defeat. The militant and united spirit of the workers as displayed in the truck drivers' strike in Minnaepolis, the general strike in San Francisco, the textile strike, the strike of the Pennsylvania coal mners, as well as the strikes of the Newspaper Guild give real hope for the future. The success of the Roosevelt program in the Tennessee Valley Authority the increasing emphasis on slum clearance and public housing projects, the regulation of the stock exchange, the air-mail graft exposure, all indicate progress.

Public ownership gains over the nation are most encouraging and the President's leadership has been an important factor. The munitions investigation has larger consequences for world peace than almost any other event. The adoption by Nebraska of a one house legislature; the upholding by the Supreme Court of the Minnesota Moratorium law; the expose of the Red Cross; the appointment of a woman, Judge Florence Allen, to the federal bench; the drive for the soldiers' bonus; the increase of progressivism and organization among the farmers; and the remarkable vote of the ministers of the nation for the cooperative commonwealth lead one to believe that we can avoid war and Fascism in America.

From the world viewpoint, the year 1934 closes with very somber trends. The assassination of King Alexander of Jugo-Slavia and Foreign Minister Barthou of France together with Jugo-Slavia's expulsion of 3,000 Hungarians led us nearer to war than we have been snce 1918. Japan's repudiation of the 5-5-3 naval ratio means a race in naval armaments. Our adoption of the Vinson bill points the way The stress on air fleets in almost every nation is discouraging. Unless checked it means that because there is no defense for air attacks the next war will begin without warning with an air attack that strikes savagely in the darkness of the night.

The defeat of Austrian and Spanish democracy with those nations going Fascist; the Hitler and Stalin cleansings as those dictators kill off large numbers of their opponents; the assumption by Hitler of the presidency and chancellorship and the continued war between Bolivia and Paraguay are on the debit side of the ledger and outweigh the favorable results of the year.

On the credt side of the world picture is the fact that another year has closed without world war The value of that result cannot be overestimated. The entry of the Soviet Union into the League of Nations, on September 17 is the most important event in international politics during the year 1934. It means that Soviet Russia is going to throw her full strength on the side of world peace. The Saar situation has improved. France has avoided Fascism. The United States has joined the International Labor Office. We have gotten our marnes out of Hati. We have abrogated the Platt amendment with Cuba. We have given independence to the Philippines It is to be hoped that we can avoid war and increasing Fascism in the New Year and strive for greater world cooperation.

Minute Sermons

By Dr. Crawford Grays

1935—A Better Year

Jesus came for human betterment; for the welfare of all people and for improved religious and economic conditions.

In the year just ended more general thought has been given to SOCIAL PLANNING that accords with some of the purposes of the Carpenter of Nazareth than in any other year in the history of these United States.

In this New Year it is happily anticipated that legislative approval will be given to measures that will assure economic stability for the American home which implies there will be broader distribution of money, labor and positions, also unemployment insurance, pensions for the aged and needy, and jointly appproved good-will concessions 'twixt capital and labor.

Already the hour has struck when labor, business and government are cooperating, as never before, for a more Christian distribution of consuming power; another triumph of the social philosophy of Him who was born in Bethlehem of Judea.

Conservation studies have been made a part of the regular public school work. This subject is included in one of the supplementary study bulletins issued by the State Department of Education. Negotiations to include conservation as a study in the school curriculum have been carried on for months between E. V. Willard, Conservation Commissioner, and John G. Rockwell, Commissioner of Education. The Conservaton Department has offered to aid the school in the preparation of the studies.

Last spring the Minnesota Rural Credit Department set aside seed potato plots on some of its farms. The purpose, T. H. Arens Conservator, says is a move for the elevation of the quality of the Minnesota seed potato, which is said to have lost some of its prestige to the North Dakota spud during the last few years. Mr. Arens reports much success and hopes to regain for Minnesota first place as a producer of seed potatoes. The experiment he says, has been quite successful.

It seems certain that Governor Olson will requesta the next legislature to pass effective water conservation laws. Minnesota, the it boast of its 10,000 lakes, is notoriously one of the backward states in the union as pertaining to water conservation legislation Common opinion to the contrary the Conservation Commission has no power whatever to control water levels. The need for this kind of legislation became more apparent the past summer and fall than ever before because of severe drouth conditions.

It is a foregone conclusion that the labor union will militantly oppose any efforts to establish a state constabulary in the coming legislature. It has been suggested that labor might not oppose a bill with clauses which would not permit the use of a state constabulary in labor disputes, as that is the main reason behind the labor opposition to such a measure. Labor fears that an unfriendly governor might use a constabulary to "break" strikes. However, it is likely that labor would support any kind of bill creating a state police force.

The heavy artillery of the Security Commission landed numerous direct hits during the past week in the trial at Moorhead of J. Cameron Thomson, Northwest Bancorporation official. Those testifying were Commissioner S. Paul Skahen, Deputy Commissioner Chas. L. Hayes, Investigator Greenberg and stenographers employed in the office. Their testimony disclosed facts unearthed in their investigation substantiating the criminal prosecution now under way.

Under authority vested in the Industrial Commission by the U. S. Department of Labor, investigations of home work in the Tag Industry and in the Coat and Suit Industry have recently been made by the Division of Women and Children. An effort is being made to eliminate certain abuses incidental to home work, especially in the Tag Industry where formerly very small children were engaged in the tedious work of stringing tags. Standards have been set up by the U. S. Department of Labor whereby state officials are authorized to issue certificates permitting home work in special cases where older employes are unable to adjust themselves to factory life, and where there is no possibility that child labor will be employed.

Minnesota collects liquor revenue at the rate of 8.7 cents per capita per month for the general fund, a recent survey of the wet states disclosed. This rate is the highest among the states voting "repeal". Authorities also declare that this high rate of collection means that Minnesota has the lowest bootlegging rate in America.

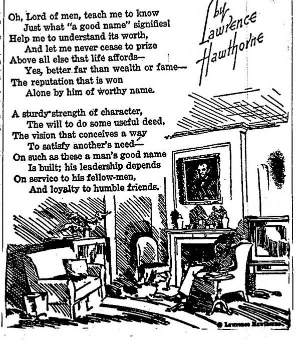
A young woman attending a social function met a former flame and was introduced to him by the hostess who was unaware of their former acquaintance. Said she: "Pardon—I didn't get the name?" To which he replied, "Quite right, but if my memory serves me correctly you tried your best."

9 Kinds of Water Now Known

The simple, old-fashioned chemistry in which water was merely H_2O is a thing of the past. No less than eight other kinds of water exist, mixed together invisibly, and all but inseparably in ordinary water.

Wild Rice

Wild rice is really not rice at all, but a food product unto itself which grows in the shallow waters of the central and southern states. It has a peculiarly smoky flavor all its own, which makes it a good seed for wild ducks and an appetizing accompaniment to many meat dishes.



A GOOD NAME

by Lawrence Hawthorne

Oh, Lord of men, teach me to know
Just what "a good name" signifies!
Help me to understand its worth,
And let me never cease to prize
Above all else that life affords—
Yes, better far than wealth or fame—
The reputation that is won
Alone by him of worthy name.

A sturdy strength of character,
The will to do some useful deed,
The vision that conceives a way
To satisfy another's need—
On such as these a man's good name
Is built; his leadership depends
On service to his fellow-men,
And loyalty to humble friends.

RAMSEY COUNTY KEEPS THE FAITH

Union Advocate

The Ramsey County Farmer-Labor association kept full faith with the founders of the movement last week when it indorsed a resolution condemning any and all efforts to change the party name. The Ramsey Laborites have issued a challenge to the camp-followers who have come into the Farmer-Labor party during the past two or three years, and it is to be hoped that other county organizations will follow the lead of Ramsey county in denouncing a brazen effort to take over the party reins during the next two years.

The movement to change the party name was instituted by Olson All-Partyites who have en[illegible] d patronage during the past few years while good and competent Farmer-Laborites have walked the streets and eaten the bitter bread of charity. These professional politicians have scorned the Farmer-Labor label all during the years they have grunted at the public feed troughs. They have refused to contribute a thin dime to the educational program of the Farmer-Labor association. In many cases they have attempted to persuade loyal Farmer-Laborites to refuse to contribute to the sustaining fund of the Farmer-Labor Leader.

Most of the opportunists realize that Governor Olson will seek a senatorial toga in 1936. They know that he will either go to Washington as a United States senator—or that he will step out of the state picture in defeat. Hence their anxiety at this time to build a "Progressive Party" during the last two years of the Governor's regime. Thus they could repudiate the present platform of a party they have scorned, and at the same time use the machinery of the present administration to build a formidable poltical machine in 1936. Every Olson All-Partyite would enroll under the meaningless banner of the "Progressive Party" and the work of years by loyal Farmer-Laborites would be utilized to betray the pioneers in the movement who have kept the faith of the elder Lindberghs and Kvales.

The Ramsey county Farmer-Labor central committee and its courageous chairman, William Wright are to be congratulated on their vigorous stand for political honesty.

ALL PROMISES BROKEN

Capper's Weekly

December 5 marked the end of the first year after repeal of the 18th amendment. Utah was the 36th state to ratify the repeal act and so make repeal effective. The results have evidently been a disappointment to the people who honestly believed that repeal would better conditions. Even the brewers and distillers have been disappointed, not because drinking has increased but because the competition of bootleggers has cut down their volume of business and their profits. There were people who honestly supposed that illegal liquor selling would be decreased; instead it has increased. Many people who supposed that the promise of repeal advocates that the saloon would not be permitted to return, would be kept. They have discovered that this promise has not been and probably never was intended to be kept. There were people who honestly believed that dry states would be protected from invasion by distillers, brewers and wholesale liquor dealers; they of course know better now.

ONE FACT WORTH TON OF PROPAGANDA

Labor

The Federal Trade Commission's sensational expose of Power Trust propaganda may have shocked the country, but apparently it had little effect on the utilities.

Speaking at Chicago this week, Dr. Hugh S. Magill, president of the American Association of Utility Investors, said:

"The clamor for the government to enter private enterprise is sponsored by Communists, those influenced by Socialist propaganda and the spoilsmen in politics."

The professor is using old stuff. The Federal Trade Commission pointed out that the Power Trust avoided arguments by "drawing a red herring across the trail and branding advocates of public ownership as Communists and enemies of American institutions."

Let's turn to a more interesting side of the question.

Mayor John T. Alsop of Jacksonville, Fla., who is on a speaking tour to "tell the world about the success of the Jacksonville municipal power plant," reports that it is earning a net profit of $1,500,000 a year while charging rates so low that the use of electricity for cooking is a real economy.

"As to politics," says Mayor Alsop, "we have had municipal ownership in Jacksonbille for 40 years and any time the city administration started playing the wrong kind of politics with the municipal electric, water or gas system, the citizens simply rose up and threw it out."

A fact like that is worth a ton of power propaganda.

REPUBLICAN BANKERS RULE CITY RELIEF

Minneapolis Labor Review

The policy of the Democratic Party is putting into effect in Minnesota that no unemployed worker shall be given a job unless he or she is on the relief line is the policy of the Citizens Alliance and the ranch bankers and the Community Fund.

It is a brutal and degrading policy. It takes away all incentive for anyone to endeavor to keep off the relief line.

So long as the labor hating, farmer fleecing branch bankers are kept in control of Minneapolis banks by democrats who controlled them during the Hoover regime there will be suspicion of the sincerity of the Democratic party regarding the city workers and the farmers.

This policy now being pursued by the federal government will bring chaos as it is already bringing suffering and resentment.

Workers want jobs at decent pay but they don't intend to have to take a pauper's before they get them.

Why not treat the workers as the banks and railroads are treated or else treat the railroads and banks as the workers are treated and make them get in the breadline before they get any government shekels.

PHYSICIANS' GROUP JOINS BRITISH LABOR UNIONS

London—The Medical Practitioners' Union, composed of more than 5,000 British physicians, has affiliated with the British Trades Union Congress and thus indirectly with the British Labor Party.

Like the teachers' union in the United States, the physicians' union has been primarily a lobbying and mutual-aid organization, rejecting the strike as a method. Affiliation with the Trades Union Congress is seen as an attempt to strengthen the union in its dealings involving public health work.

Lead as Water Users

People of Scotland use more water per person than anyone else in Great Britain, and they use it primarily for washing. Dunblane, Scotland, uses an average of 130 gallons per person a day. Other Scotch cities and towns are not far behind. Even large industrial districts do not use near that amount.

CRAFTMAN'S GUILD EXPANDS MODEL MAKING COMPETITION

Detroit, Mich.—Establishment of an apprentice class to broaden the scope of the Fisher Body Craftman's Guild was announced last week by President William A. Fisher in making known plans for the 1935 model coach-building competition of the educational foundation, in which 856 awards valued at more than $55,000 will be offered. These include six $5,000 university scholarships.

Creation of the new division is the result of recognition on the part of Fisher Body and General Motors executives that the value of the Guild to the youth of America could be enhanced by taking further steps to encourage the development of manual skill among those with little natural aptitude or training.

The project of the competitions conducted each year since 1930 has been a model coach that is a composite of the ornate vehicles used for the coronation of the Emperor Napoleon and his wedding to the Princess Marie Louise of Austria. It is being retained as the project for boys enrolling in the master class.

A traveing coach of the same period, however, has been selected for reproduction by those matriculating in the newly created apprentice class. It is simpler in design, easier of construction, and should take form much more rapidly at the hands of the novice than the original model, yet should teach him the fundamentals of good craftsmanship, according to Mr. Fisher.

"It is our thought to provide a stepping stone, so the boy may progress naturally and easily thru the various stages in the development of manual skill," the head of the Fisher Body Division of General Motors states. "Discouragement has prevented many, who lacked either natural ability or proper instruction, from learning the joy of being able to do things with their hands. It also has denied hem the self-assurance and the appreciation of the crafts that normally follow."

PHYSICIANS' GROUP JOINS BRITISH LABOR UNIONS

London—The Medical Practitioners' Union, composed of more than 5,000 British physicians, has affiliated with the British Trades Union Congress and thus indirectly with the British Labor Party.

Like the teachers' union in the United States, the physicians' union has been primarily a lobbying and mutual-aid organization, rejecting the strike as a method. Affiliation with the Trades Union Congress is seen as an attempt to strengthen the union in its dealings involving public health work.

Lead as Water Users

People of Scotland use more water per person than anyone else in Great Britain, and they use it primarily for washing. Dunblane, Scotland, uses an average of 130 gallons per person a day. Other Scotch cities and towns are not far behind. Even large industrial districts do not use near that amount.

CRAFTMAN'S GUILD EXPANDS MODEL MAKING COMPETITION

Detroit, Mich.—Establishment of an apprentice class to broaden the scope of the Fisher Body Craftman's Guild was announced last week by President William A. Fisher in making known plans for the 1935 model coach-building competition of the educational foundation, in which 856 awards valued at more than $55,000 will be offered. These include six $5,000 university scholarships.

Creation of the new division is the result of recognition on the part of Fisher Body and General Motors executives that the value of the Guild to the youth of America could be enhanced by taking further steps to encourage the development of manual skill among those with little natural aptitude or training.

The project of the competitions conducted each year since 1930 has been a model coach that is a composite of the ornate vehicles used for the coronation of the Emperor Napoleon and his wedding to the Princess Marie Louise of Austria. It is being retained as the project for boys enrolling in the master class.

A traveing coach of the same period, however, has been selected for reproduction by those matriculating in the newly created apprentice class. It is simpler in design, easier of construction, and should take form much more rapidly at the hands of the novice than the original model, yet should teach him the fundamentals of good craftsmanship, according to Mr. Fisher.

"It is our thought to provide a stepping stone, so the boy may progress naturally and easily thru the various stages in the development of manual skill," the head of the Fisher Body Division of General Motors states. "Discouragement has prevented many, who lacked either natural ability or proper instruction, from learning the joy of being able to do things with their hands. It also has denied hem the self-assurance and the appreciation of the crafts that normally follow."

BISHOP NAMED SUCCESSOR TO JUDGE TARRANT

Was Once Municipal Judge; Resident of City 33 Years

J. M. Bishop, local attorney, was appointed Municipal Judge of this city to fill the vacancy left by the death of N. W. Tarrant week ago Sunday. The appointment was made by Governor Floyd B. Olson, who announced the selection of Mr. Bishop last Friday evening

The newly appointed judge was born on a farm in Iowa where he worked during his boyhood, while attending country school, and later during his vacations, while he spent six years at the University of Iowa and at Valparaiso University. During his studies at the universities he received the degrees: Bachelor of Science; Bachelor of Arts; and Bachelor of Law. He was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court and the United States Courts in Indiana, Iowa and Minnesota.

He came to Minnesota in 1902, and soon thereafter established his home and practice in this city, residing here but a short time when he was appointed Municipal Judge. He was elected to that office at the following election and reelected, serving nine years altogether.It was during this period that the Red Lake Indian Reservation was opened to homestead, and some of the early settlers made their final proof before him. He was the first Municipal Judge in the state before whom aliens received their citizenship papers.

During the World War he was a member of the legal advisory board of Pennington County.

Judge Bishop has been actively engaged in legal practice for over forty years.

Tex Norquist Opens Gymnastic Classes In the Old Elks Hall

Agitation for an athletic club has led to the forming of such a club by Wm. LaFave and Mr. Messenger with Tex Norquist as trainer. According to plans the name of the group will be "The Thief River Falls Athletic Club" and it will function similarly to that of other clubs which were organized in recent years.

The gymnasium will be installed in the Elks Hall in the Citizens' State Bank building and will be opened evey night during the week excepting Saturdays and Sundays; on Wednesday nights the gym will be opened to boys under sixteen years old. The boys' class will be under the direction of the District Recreational Leader, Mr. Messenger.

According to Mr. LaFave, there are already several men who have given creditable performances in the past who have signified their intention of joining. Thrills are promised at every event put on by the club.

It was stated by "Bill" LaFave that if there are any persons living outside of the city who wish to join the club or to participate in any of the events that he would be glad to hear from them.

Monday evening will be open house in the gym and everyone is welcome to come up and inspect the equipment and watch the men work-out.

P. C. A. HOLDS ANNUAL DIST. MEETING TUES

E. A. Bowie Gives Lecture On the Function of Association

The Production Credit Association of this district held their annual meeting at the county Court House. The meeting opened at eleven o'clock Tuesday morning and adjourned at four o'clock the following afternoon. The meeting consisted mainly of class B stockholders and several other visitars.

Mr. Hunt, the president, called the meeting to order and then Secretary-Treasurer, Rob't. Lund read the minutes of the preceeding meeting. The stockholders discussed the minutes and then were introduced to Mr. Emil A. Boie of St. Paul.

Mr. Boie came here to explain to the stockholders the details and the idea behind the Association. The local headquarters cover a district which consists of Pennington, Red Lake, Rosseau, Lake of the Woods and parts of several other counties. Throughout this territory the farmers who have received loans become B stockholders. The class A stock is in the hands of those who financed the Association. As the Association gets on its feet the Class A stockholders will be bought out and the Class B stockholders, the farmers who maintain loans will be the controlling interest of the Association. This credit move is for the farmers, it is their own organization from which they can and will receive protection. Mr. Boie explained that when applications for loans are submitted to the Board of Directors, whose

TUNGSETH FAILS TO RESIGN HIS MAYOR POSITION

Anderson Re-appointed Chief Engineer of Municipal Power Plant

The council members were virtually at the end of the blind alley onTuesday evening when they found that Mayor E. L. Tungseth has left the city and taken his place in the state senate without tendering his resignation as mayor. Dame Rumor has it that the Mayor desired to choose his own successor and when the council refused this he slipped one over on the boys by leaving the city without resigning. Some of the members were quite hot under the collar and demanded that the City Attorney find a way out of the quandary. However, the city's legal advisor was not sure just what course of action would have to be taken. And suggested that it might take some time to procure the resignation by serving a mandamus or demand or other Blackstonean Documents on the absent his honor. It seems to be a real problem and some of the city papas are up in the air about it, figuratively speaking.

On getting down to the business of the evening Mr. A. G Anderson, a former chief engineer at the light plant, who was discharged by W. W. Viebahm the erstwhile city engineer for failing to "cooperate" was reinstated by the council who quite frankly admit their former error. Mr. Anderson had been the employee for 16 years when he was discharged.

Mr. Dudley of the Dudley block called the attention of the council to the electrical interference caused by signs and certain electrical instruments in radio reception Apparently an ordinance makes provision for the naming of an inspector to check up on cases of radio interference and provides penalties for violations. Mr. Ole Legvold was named too take charge of the inspection.

An application for a dance permit to have dances prolonged into Sunday morning was made by a theatrical troup from Grand Forks. The matter was laid on the table. A resolution was passed advertising for bids on city printing and another authorized payment of the auditorium stoker.

Retains County Engineer & Present Court House Janitor

The county board held their annual meeting at the court house Monday morning. Paul Roy was elected chairman and bonds of the county officials were approved, Mr. Mandt was nominated as head of the child welfare board, Gunstad of St. Hilaire was appointed to the head of the sanitation committee, Roy and Mandt were elected to serve as the county agricultural association committee, Dr. Melby was appointed as county health officer, this office was held before by Dr. Adkins.

Alfred Bredeson and W. H. Mulry, the new members of the board drew appointment to act on the county board of health. Dr. Twete was reappointed on the livestock sanitation board.

The cost of county printing took another tumble when the bids were opened at three o'clock. The Thief River Falls Times bidding 15 cents per folio on proceedings with no charge for tabular matter of the delinquent tax list. The Forums' bid was 30 cents per folio with an aditional 15 cents per folio on tabular matter. Its quotation on the delinquent tax list was 15 cents per description.

Speaking on behalf of his paper R. M. Aalbu publisher of the Forum stated, that he believed that the taxpayers and the county would be best served if the Forum bid was accepted. He showed that the bid was based on the cost of space as sold for advertising purposes, plus the cost of composition in small type. He reminded the Board that two years ago they pleaded with the Times on behalf of the people unable to pay their taxes to reduce the cost of printing but were assured by the publishers of the Times that 80 cents per folio was the very lowest figure at which the work could be done, and that in the absence of any competitive bid the county was forced to pay 80 cents per folio during the entire year on 1932, although the Times six weeks after having received the county contract, in bidding against the Forum which had by that time become a legal newspaper, bid but 10 cents per folio and got the contract so that they were doing the city printing for 10 cents per folio during the entire year that they were collecting 80 cents per folio from the county.

"I gave you an honest bid last year," Mr. Aalbu said," and I gave you an honest bid today. Whether I am one publisher in the county alone or one out of a score, the Forum will always give you an honest bid asking a dollar for a dollar's worth of service. I will never take a job at less than cost, neither wil I gouge anyone merely because I have no competition. The bid presented to you by the Times, is a cut-throat bid designed to drive competition out of business if possible so that they may again soak you to the legal limit."

Speaking on behalf of the Times W. E. Dahlquist was very apologetic. He admitted that their bid was a cut-throat bid, far below production costs, and submitted to eliminate competition and get the job at any price. "We got nothing last year," Mr. Dahlquist stated, "and this would be better than getting nothing."

The board mulled the matter for a moment. Commissioner Bredeson moved that the contract be awarded to the Thief River Falls Times but his motion was not seconded. After several minutes Commissioner Mandt stated that but for the Forum and its honest bidding a year ago the county would still be paying 90 cents per folio. He suggested that they think the matter over before taking action. A motion to that effect was made by Commissioner Lee. Commissioner Brede-

Was Once Municipal Judge Resident of City 33 Years

Tex Norquist Opens Gymnastic Classes In the Old Elks Hall

Agitation for an athletic club has led to the forming of such a club by Wm. LaFave and Mr. Messenger with Tex Norquist as trainer. According to plans the name of the group will be "The Thief River Falls Athletic Club" and it will function similarly to that of other clubs which were organized in recent years.

The gymnasium will be installed in the Elks Hall in the Citizens' State Bank building and will be opened evey night during the week excepting Saturdays and Sundays; on Wednesday nights the gym will be opened to boys under sixteen years old. The boys' class will be under the direction of the District Recreational Leader, Mr. Messenger.

According to Mr. LaFave, there are already several men who have given creditable performances in the past who have signified their intention of joining. Thrills are promised at every event put on by the club.

It was stated by "Bill" LaFave that if there are any persons living outside of the city who wish to join the club or to participate in any of the events that he would be glad to hear from them.

E. A. Bowie Gives Lecture On the Function of Association

The Production Credit Association of this district held their annual meeting at the county Court House. The meeting opened at eleven o'clock Tuesday morning and adjourned at four o'clock the following afternoon. The meeting consisted mainly of class B stockholders and several other visitars.

Mr. Hunt, the president, called the meeting to order and then Secretary-Treasurer, Rob't. Lund read the minutes of the preceeding meeting. The stockholders discussed the minutes and then were introduced to Mr. Emil A. Boie of St. Paul.

Mr. Boie came here to explain to the stockholders the details and the idea behind the Association. The local headquarters cover a district which consists of Pennington, Red Lake, Rosseau, Lake of the Woods and parts of several other counties. Throughout this territory the farmers who have received loans become B stockholders. The class A stock is in the hands of those who financed the Association. As the Association gets on its feet the Class A stockholders will be bought out and the Class B stockholders, the farmers who maintain loans will be the controlling interest of the Association. This credit move is for the farmers, it is their own organization from which they can and will receive protection. Mr. Boie explained that when applications for loans are submitted to the Board of Directors, whose

Anderson Re-appointed Chief Engineer of Municipal Power Plant

The council members were virtually at the end of the blind alley onTuesday evening when they found that Mayor E. L. Tungseth has left the city and taken his place in the state senate without tendering his resignation as mayor. Dame Rumor has it that the Mayor desired to choose his own successor and when the council refused this he slipped one over on the boys by leaving the city without resigning. Some of the members were quite hot under the collar and demanded that the City Attorney find a way out of the quandary. However, the city's legal advisor was not sure just what course of action would have to be taken. And suggested that it might take some time to procure the resignation by serving a mandamus or demand or other Blackstonean Documents on the absent his honor. It seems to be a real problem and some of the city papas are up in the air about it, figuratively speaking.

On getting down to the business of the evening Mr. A. G Anderson, a former chief engineer at the light plant, who was discharged by W. W. Viebahm the erstwhile city engineer for failing to "cooperate" was reinstated by the council who quite frankly admit their former error. Mr. Anderson had been the employee for 16 years when he was discharged.

Mr. Dudley of the Dudley block called the attention of the council to the electrical interference caused by signs and certain electrical instruments in radio reception Apparently an ordinance makes provision for the naming of an inspector to check up on cases of radio interference and provides penalties for violations. Mr. Ole Legvold was named too take charge of the inspection.

An application for a dance permit to have dances prolonged into Sunday morning was made by a theatrical troup from Grand Forks. The matter was laid on the table. A resolution was passed advertising for bids on city printing and another authorized payment of the auditorium stoker.

I will never take a job at less than cost, neither wil I gouge anyone merely because I have no competition. The bid presented to you by the Times, is a cut-throat bid designed to drive competition out of business if possible so that they may again soak you to the legal limit."

Speaking on behalf of the Times W. E. Dahlquist was very apologetic. He admitted that their bid was a cut-throat bid, far below production costs, and submitted to eliminate competition and get the job at any price. "We got nothing last year," Mr. Dahlquist stated, "and this would be better than getting nothing."

The board mulled the matter for a moment. Commissioner Bredeson moved that the contract be awarded to the Thief River Falls Times but his motion was not seconded. After several minutes Commissioner Mandt stated that but for the Forum and its honest bidding a year ago the county would still be paying 90 cents per folio. He suggested that they think the matter over before taking action. A motion to that effect was made by Commissioner Lee. Commissioner Brede-

SOCIALIST COMMITTEE GIVES VIEWS ON SENATE MUNITION INVESTIGATION OF PROFITS

[illegible] York—President Roosevelt's proposals for taking profit [illegible] war are in themselves good, [illegible] plan, coming at this time, [illegible] method of soft-pedalling the [illegible] munitions investigation, [illegible] to [illegible] statement of the [illegible] public affairs committee [illegible] Socialist party, consisting of [illegible] Thomas, James O'Neal [illegible] Delson. The persnnel of [illegible] committee is also attacked.

The statement follows:

"President Roosevelt's suggestions for taking profit out of war deserve serious consideration. It is, however, terribie unfortunate that the time at which they were made, the way in which they were made, and the personnel of the committee to which they have been referred suggests an attempt to blanket or sidetrack the munitions inquiry. Subsequent statements by Mr. Baruch and the President do not altogether repair the damage.

"Senator Nye is entirely right that government departments which the president has been consulting are themselves on trial in the matter of this muntions inquiry. They should not be asked to bring forward their own program of reformation. The record and associations of Mr. Baruch and General Johnson emphatically do not make them the best men to handle a situation which involves not only profits from war but profits from preparation for war.

"Mr. Roosevelt himself may remember that he was once a member of an administration which wasn't going to end profits from war, but to end war. It is still far more important to end war than profits from war. Wars—at least large scale wars—do not arise from a desire for profit in war. They arise from the general struggle for profits and they are furthered by desire for the profits made by the merchants of death in preparations for war.

"With this latter question the President's proposal does not deal at all, or at least not with any adequacy. Indeed, the final proposal, that the munitions production load shall be distributed properly over the United States, may be regarded as a bid to different geographical areas to get their share of whatever financial gains are to be reaped by making munitions instead of building homes.

"At the moment the all-important thing is for public opinion to back up the munitions inquiry and to extend it without fear or favor into every nook and crevice of the most nefarious trade in human history since the abolition of the slave trade."

WETS WANT SCHOOLS TO TEACH YOUTH TO DRINK

By W. G. Calderwood

The Juvenile Protective Association of Chicago recently submitted to its board of directors a report of conditions in that city which reveals the debasing and debauching influences that have followed repeal especially in its impact on juvenile life. After citing the law which prohibits the "sale of intoxicating liquors to minors or intoxicated persons" the report states that liquor is shamelessly sold to childrer even under 10 years of age, and cites specific cases in proof, and [illegible] proof of the open violation of prohibition. There is more drinkieted persons.

The report answers the cheerful Pollyannas who claim that repeal has improved conditions: "Some people think that there is no more drinking now than during the time of prohibition. There is more drinking in Chicago than formerly, and there are more drunks, both men and women. The police records may not show that there are more arrests for drunkenness; if that is so, it is because the police are not arresting men and women who are drunk.

"A very obnoxious practice has developed," the report states, "where they employ young girls as hostesses. The duty of these girls is to visit at the tables of the men and get them to buy more liquor than they otherwise would do. The girls always order the most expensive drinks, for which the man has to pay."

Other paragraphs deplore that age-old alliance between the saloon and brothels, and details the hand-in-glove intimacy between them—the saloon affords conveniences and connections for the harlot, brings her victims to the saloon.

In spite of promises of the Chicago administration to the contrary, child entertainers are employed in these sink holes of sin and degradation which, in the face of the law, run al day and all night without molestation. After lights are dimmed and curtains are drawn in mock compliance with the law, a "butler" is sometmes stationed at the door to tell passers-by that the place is open, and to invite them.

NO ARYAN RESTRICTIONS IN WAR TIMES, STATES THE GERMAN MINISTER OF WAR

Berlin (TIS)—The position of the German Jews in a future war has finally been clarfied in an official communication by the ministry of war to the Federation of Jewish ex-soldiers. In reply to an inquiry about the future military status of the Jews in war times, the ministry states that Jewish war volunteers will be accepted in all mili ary services. No detailed informations were given.

SNOW PLOWING IN VILLAGES PROVES TO UNACCEPTABLE

Why doesn't the state highway department give the same snow plowing service on village streets used for trunk routes as on the routes optside of municipalities? This query was made by a Minnesota newspaper editor last week.

The answer, says a highway department bulletin, is that the deparment is willing to give the same service, but this has proved unacceptable to most municipalities. Snow plowing operations of the highway department are confined to pushing the snow off the roadway to the sides. In a municipality this means piling up snow against the curbs and eliminating parking space. This is not desired by the local merchants, and as a result most small towns have asked the department not to plow in the village limits, preferring to let traffic pack the snow down.

UNION MEN ACQTITTED OF DYNAMITE FUSE STEALING

By J. C. Taylor

Kenton, O.—In one of the most bitterly fought and spetacular trials ever witnessed in Hardin county, Ohio, Karl Pauli of Toledo, state organizer of the Socialist party of Ohio and Ralph Pearce, McGuffey, Ohio, member of the Agricultural Workers' union and a prominent character in the onion weeders' strike, have been acquitted of stealing eight feet of dynamite fuse by a jury in Common Pleas Court here. The acquittal came as a dramatic climax to a series of trials involving striking onion weeders on the Scioto marsh, indicted for various offenses ranging from assault to kill to petit larceny.

Convictions had been secured by the state in all the cases preceeding the Pauli-Pearce trials, through liberal use of trumped-up evidence and the introduction, through the friendly aid of the court, of evidence having little or nothing to do with the crimes charged, but calculated to prejudice the middle class juries of small merchants and farmers against the defendants.

Among those convicted was Okey Odell, leader of the strikers and president of the Agricultural Workers' union. Odell was charged with pointing a firearm but was convicted of being president of a labor union, leader of the strike, and for his courage in remaining in Hardin county after he had been ordered by a mob to get out for good.

Angered and baffled by the tactics of the prosecution in the earlier trials, and warned by this experience as to what course the prosecution might take in order to secure another conviction, counsel for the defense, Eldon Young of Toledo, and H. E. Lease and Roy Roof of Kenton, threw all caution to the winds and unmindful of the consequences tore into the state's case in a desperate effort to prove that a conspiracy existed between the large onion growers, the county prosecutor and the sheriffs office to break the strike by fair or foul means.

No attempt was made to conceal the fact that the strike was led by socialists from Toledo, and that Pauli was an official organizer of the party, one of those whose duties was to assist in strikes. The fundamentals of Socialism were explained to the jury as well as the tactics of the Socialist party in relation to strike situations. The state, as usual, attempted to try Pauli and Pearce on the crime of being outside agitators, experienced dynamiters, racketeers and gangsters of a particularly vicious type.

The verdict brought great encouragement to the members of the striking Agricultural union whose ranks remain practically unbroken, and are prepared to reopen hostilities in the spring when the planting season begins. All the cases of the previously convicted will be appealed.

LIPSCHITZ TO REPRESENT THE AUSTRIAN SOCIALISTS

New York—The foreign office of the Austrian Social-Democracy has decided to name Dr. A. S. Lipschitz of New York as its official representative in the United States declared Dr. Julius Deutsch of Austria on the eve of his departure for Europe. Dr. Deutsch has just returned from a sixweek lecture tour throughout the country conducted by the American Socialist party.

Expressing his confidence in the victory of the Austrian people over Fascism and tyranny, Dr. Deutsch pointed out that the naming of a representative in America is a "public" confirmation of the importance which the Austrian Socialist and Labor Movement, comprising the majority of the Austrian people, attaches to the U. S. A., as a world power, and of the decisive role which America is destined to play in the future social reconstruction of Europe."

OFFICIALS APPRECIATE RESPONSE TO GAME BIRD FEEDING APPEALS MADE

Game and fish officials of the Minnesota Department of Conservation are grateful because of the state-wide response that has been made to an appeal they issued recently for aid in feeding upland game birds which were threatened with starvation due to heavy snow in many sections of the state. State game wardens are cooperating in every district in seeing to it that the game birds are properly fed and that adequate shelters are provided.

"Sportsmen's organizations, 4-H clubs, Boy Scouts, School children, rural mail carriers, civic and patriotic groups are doing splendid work in arranging for feed for our upland game birds," Erling Swenson, Director of Game and Fish said. "With this sort of cooperation, we have every hope of bringing through the winter a sufficient brood stock for the spring nesting season."

Federal and state grain inspection samples have been made available for winter bird feeding. During the month of November about 13,000 pounds of grain were secured from these sources with the bulk of this feed being placed for birds on the Carlos Avery wild life refuge in Anoka county.

Efforts will be made to enlist the aid of the State Emergency Relief Administration in saving the upland game birds of the state, assuring a continuance of the foundation stock.

UNEMPLOYED BEAR COSTS OF GERMAN WINTER RELIEF

Hannover (TIS)—Nazi propaganda points again with pride to the tremendous winter relief work and to the fact that no German was compelled to go hungry during the last winter.

The following figures show how far the Nazi claims tally with the actual facts. Approximately 18 million people were supported by the winter relief. The total amount raised was 320 million marks which means that everybody on the relief lists received 70 pfennig weekly, for a period of 26 weeks. The average welfare relief given to the unemployed before Hitler's advent to power, was 14 marks weekly. During the first year of the Nazi regime this amount was reduced to 10 marks. In other words, 4 marks were taken away from the unemployed and 70 pfennig were given back to them thru the winter relief work. It is doubtful if the Nazis will be able to raise stimlrmuoiasnafr.1EAONU raise similar amounts for the coming winter.

SERA Has Excelent Distribution Record

In distributing more than 10,000,000 pounds of surplus commodities throughout Minnesota, a loss of only a fraction of one per cent or 9,644 pounds was incurred, reports Fred A. Gilbert, director of commodity distribution, Minnesota SERA.

The record is considered excellent in view of the fact that virtually 1,000,000 pounds of fresh meat was included in the total of 10,067,425.

Here follows a summary of commodities distributed through this agency to date, in pound weight: Salt pork, 2,318,600; canned beef, 2,159,603; smoked pork, 1,907,682; flour, 1,381,932; fresh veal, 811,357 butter, 621,010; lard, 446,340; milk-wheat-o, 249,840; fresh beef, 111-463; and cheese 59,625.

PHYSICIANS' GROUP JOINS BRITISH LABOR UNIONS

London—The Medical Practitioners' Union, composed of more than 5,000 British physicians, has affiliated with the British Trades Union Congress and thus indirectly with the British Labor Party.

Like the teachers' union in the United States, the physicians' union has been primarily a lobbying and mutual-aid organization, rejecting the strike as a method. Affiliation with the Trades Union Congress is seen as an attempt to strengthen the union in its dealings involving public health work.

ALL HORSES SHOULD BE TREATED FOR BOTFLIES

Now is the time to treat horses to get rid of those botflies, which otherwise will prove a terrible nuisance next spring. Wabasha county farmers in the neighborhood of Plainview conducted a community botfly eradication campaign last winter and were immensely pleased to find that during the past summer they had no trouble with their horses because of bot and nose flies.

Botflies lay their eggs on the hair of horses, especially on the inner side of the knees. In licking or biting itself, the horse get the young bots into its mouth from where the bots pass to the stomach and live over the winter in the form of larve. In the spring these larve passes out of the animal with the manure and then change into winged botflies. Scientists have learned that dosing horses with carbon disulphide in capsule form in the winter gets rid of the botfly larve before they can complete their growth. December and January are the best months to treat, because treatment during this period allows time for recuperation and affords better chances for the animals to be in good condition for spring work.

Carlton D. Nelson, agricultural instructor of the Plainview Public Schools conducted a horse bot eradication campaign last winter for the area including Plainview, Elgin, Highland, and Oakwood townships.

A campaign was organized and a committee of farmers formed to work on bot eradication. Two local veterarians agreed to treat horses at 50 cents each, including the cost of the capsules. A total of 2,208 horses were treated, which included practically all of those in the territory. Getting as nearly all the farmers as possible to treat their horses is very important, since botflies from untreated horses would reinfest the area.

Mr. Nelson says he has heard much favorable comment regarding the Plainview area campaign. Most farmers remarked that their horses wintered over much better on the same amount of feed than in previous winters, and that they seemed to stand the spring work better. The majority were in favor of treating their horses again this winter.

Lights for Sailboats

STATE WARNS AGAINST USE OF WEED INFESTED SEEDS

This year, when seed grain is very scarce in some sections of the state, supplies must be brought in from elsewhere to meet the needs. Great care should be exercised in purchase of seed grain to avoid the spread of all weeds, but particularly field bindweed (creeping jenny), and leafy spurge, says A. C. Arny, agronomist, University Farm, St. Paul.

Both of these weeds have become fairly well established, particularly in the southwestern part of the state, although not limited to that section entirely, and it costs from $20 to $30 an acre to eradicate them.

Farmers in the drouth countries who truck seed out of the counties, who have a surplus of seed grain should be very careful to avoid buying seed coming from any farm infested with leafy spurge or field bindweed. Up to as high as 60 seeds of field bindweed per pound of grain have been found in grain taken from bins on farms in the areas infested with this weed. Leafy spurge seed has been found in the grain in all farms infested with this weed, that have been checked. It is difficult to remove completely seeds of these weeds from grain, so one should not buy with the idea of cleaning the grain after it has been obtained.

The Seed Laboratory, University Farm, will examine up to ten samples of seed, for any resident of the state, free of charge. Pint samples should be sent.

Wabasha county farmers in the neighborhood of Plainview conducted a community botfly eradication campaign last winter and were immensely pleased to find that during the past summer they had no trouble with their horses because of bot and nose flies.

Botflies lay their eggs on the hair of horses, especially on the inner side of the knees. In licking or biting itself, the horse get the young bots into its mouth from where the bots pass to the stomach and live over the winter in the form of larve. In the spring these larve passes out of the animal with the manure and then change into winged botflies. Scientists have learned that dosing horses with carbon disulphide in capsule form in the winter gets rid of the botfly larve before they can complete their growth. December and January are the best months to treat, because treatment during this period allows time for recuperation and affords better chances for the animals to be in good condition for spring work.

Carlton D. Nelson, agricultural instructor of the Plainview Public Schools conducted a horse bot eradication campaign last winter for the area including Plainview, Elgin, Highland, and Oakwood townships.

A campaign was organized and a committee of farmers formed to work on bot eradication. Two local veterarians agreed to treat horses at 50 cents each, including the cost of the capsules. A total of 2,208 horses were treated, which included practically all of those in the territory. Getting as nearly all the farmers as possible to treat their horses is very important, since botflies from untreated horses would reinfest the area.

Mr. Nelson says he has heard much favorable comment regarding the Plainview area campaign. Most farmers remarked that their horses wintered over much better on the same amount of feed than in previous winters, and that they seemed to stand the spring work better. The majority were in favor of treating their horses again this winter.

Lights for Sailboats

The following lights are required for sailboats in all weather, visible from sunset to sunrise: A red light on the left or nort side, visible from right ahead to two points abaft the beam; a green light on the right or starboard side, visible from right ahead to two points abaft the beam; a white light forward, visible over 10 points of the compass on each side. Rules regulating side lights are to be complied with when the vessel is under way only and not otherwise. When at anchor show a white light visible all around the horizon. A vessel being overtaken by another should show a white light astern, visible over 12 points of the compass aft.

STATE WARNS AGAINST USE OF WEED INFESTED SEEDS

This year, when seed grain is very scarce in some sections of the state, supplies must be brought in from elsewhere to meet the needs. Great care should be exercised in purchase of seed grain to avoid the spread of all weeds, but particularly field bindweed (creeping jenny), and leafy spurge, says A. C. Arny, agronomist, University Farm, St. Paul.

Both of these weeds have become fairly well established, particularly in the southwestern part of the state, although not limited to that section entirely, and it costs from $20 to $30 an acre to eradicate them.

Farmers in the drouth countries who truck seed out of the counties, who have a surplus of seed grain should be very careful to avoid buying seed coming from any farm infested with leafy spurge or field bindweed. Up to as high as 60 seeds of field bindweed per pound of grain have been found in grain taken from bins on farms in the areas infested with this weed. Leafy spurge seed has been found in the grain in all farms infested with this weed, that have been checked. It is difficult to remove completely seeds of these weeds from grain, so one should not buy with the idea of cleaning the grain after it has been obtained.

The Seed Laboratory, University Farm, will examine up to ten samples of seed, for any resident of the state, free of charge. Pint samples should be sent.

To All Right-Thinking Citizens

WAR has been declared on THE FORUM

The gang that paid for the Townley Vilification Campaign, the same gang that offered Regan $50,000 to withdraw from the gubernatorial race in the eleventh hour has decided that The Forum must die.

The tactics employed against this paper by the Thief River Falls Times, tool of the chain bank crowd, show that they insist that there can be but one newspaper in the city of Thief River Falls.

We accept the challenge; IF THERE IS TO BE ONLY ONE PAPER, THEN THAT PAPER SHALL BE THE FORUM.

We call upon the taxpayers, who have been saved thousands of dollars through the honest bidding of the Forum; we call upon the people who have been given the truth about public affairs through the Forum; we call upon the farmers and workers whose battles we have fought to back us up with their subscriptions and by patronizing those merchants who place their advertisements in this paper.

The Forum has the largest circulation in this territory. We have challenged the opposition to a comparison of subscription lists and they have admitted their limitations by ignoring the challenge. Circulation is what advertisers pay for; we have it, and if merchants refuse to place their advertising in the Forum, where they get the most for their money it can only mean that they are unfair to the farmers and workers, both white-collar and overall.

There are many merchants who are fair. Their merchandise is equal or superior in quality to that offered by those who are unfair, and their prices are as reasonable.

THERE IS MORE THAN ONE HOUSECLEANING NEEDED

Many of the Farmer-Labor papers thruout the state, including the Forum have voiced a demand for a housecleaning at the State House. We repeat, if repetition is necessary that such a housecleaning should be made, and made at once. However, there is another housecleaning necessary also, and that is within the Farmer-Labor association itself. There is no doubt that there are various cliques and brain-trusts withing the organization that are continually trying to swing its policies and activities to their own benefit. Their power and influence was quite distinctly felt at the state convention last March and while they received something of a drubbing at that gathering, their power was far from broken. No sooner had the convention adjourned than they set about to undo or divert the accomplishments of the association at that meeting to their own end. A year and a half remain before the association must again go before the people with its platforn and it behoves us to organize our forces and place the control of the association in the hands of the rank and file before that time comes. We believe that several things must be done to accomplish that end.

First, strict provisions in the rules of the organization should prohibit officials, appointed or elected from holding office in the association. If an official of the association is endorsed as a candidate for office, or if he received an appointment to office, the bylaws should provide that he must as once resign his position in the association. This would mean no state employee could hold an office in the association, and we believe that such a rule is necessary to prevent machines from being set up within the association. Second; no person should be endorsed for office who has been a member of the association for less than four years. No person should be elligible to hold office in the association who has been a member of the organization for less than 4 years. We believe that such prpecautions are necessary to prevent bandwagon jumpers from getting control of the asociation, or any part of it.

Third; if we understand the aim and purpose of the Farmer-Labor association correctly, it is an organization of men and women who believe in a reconstruction of society to the end that the commn people shall enjoy the fruits of their labor without exploitation by entrenched wealth. That they are agreed that this can best be accomplished thru the establishment of the Cooperative Democracy. That this means retaining our American form of government and broadening its democratic institutions by eliminataing special privilege. That we believe in government by the majority. That we are concerned primarily with advancing the Cooperative Democracy and not with holding offices or jobs. That political power is merely a means to an end and not the end itself.

If we are correct in this premise, then we believe that we must so organize our association that absolute democracy prevails. That the will of the majority is reflected in our platform and in our slate of candidates, and then insist that every member of the association goes down the line with the platform and with the slate of candidates or withdraw as a member of the association.

In order that this be brought about we suggest that an interim platform committee shall be selected to promulgate a tentative platform which shall be released to the press and to the association before the biennial county conventions. Thus this platform may be discussed at the county convention and delegates instructed with regard to it. That this tentative platform be the nucleus with which the convention platform committee begins work. We believe further that the conventions, state, congressional and legislative, should make dual endorsements for every office and that the final choice shall rest the rank and file of the membership thru referendum vote. In the same manner, disputed planks in the platform should be refered to the rank and file thru the referendum for final choice between the plank or planks adopted by the convention and that submitted by a minority of not less than one fourth of the delegates to the state convention.

We have faith in the good sense and good judgement of the rank and file of our people if they can only be informed and given in their own hands the powers of self-government. We believe that in the heart of every worker, whether it be the workers on the farms, in the shops or in the factories there dwells a spark of idealism kindled there by the Creator of the Universe and typified in the teachings of the Nazarene. We believe that in the economic philosophy of the Farmer1-Labor association we have the instrument with which we can yet build a democracy where almhouses and poorhouses are unknow for no-one is in want; where jails and penitentiaries have disappeared for no-one need longer covet his neighbors goods; where insane asylms and liquor institutes does not exist for no man can longer exploit the weakness of his fellowmen. It can be done, if we will but reason together and act, as reason dictates.

WHO PAYS THE FREIGHT?

There is a profusely illustrated magazine being sent to rural and village boxholders entitled "Rural Progress." Aside from the fact that it is attractively put up with style hints and patterns to warm the feminine heart; lots of pictures and "intimate" stuff about movie actors and actresses to beguile the young folks, it is sent you FREE.

An explanation of this free stuff by the editors assure us that advertising is so lucrative that a subscription price is quite unnecessary. An analyis of the January issue shows that it contains 312 inches of bona fide advertising. It claims a circulation of two million copipes. Having no subscription list it is barred from the second class mailing privileges and must pay one cent per copy straight for mailing. This means $20,000 per issue in postage. This means that the January issue would have to bring over $67 per column inch for advertising to pay the cost of mailing only. Surely we must ask: Who pays the freight? The advertisers do not. Is there some public spirited individual who out of the kindness of his heart is sending the rural population of the Northwest this dressy little magazine just to enrich their drab existence—or is there someone who has an axe to grind and is willing to pay for the grinding with good hard "Iron Men?"

We are inclined to believe the latter to be the case and with this in mind we analyzed its reading matter. We find the feature article to be one regarding taxes. A pretty good article too, containing some tax facts. But it leaves the reader with the impression that county government is bad business and counties should be abolished. Then there is some movie stuff . That probably brings them a few shekels. Great for publicity the Movie Folks. Then there is also some poultry stuff, some dairy some livestock, some farm business and then some editorial. More about taxes and telling us that the township is dead and ought to be burried. First the county and then the township. Someone would like to have us believe that Home Rule is bad for us and that government is so much more effective and economical if it is centralized in a very few people. They might also add that it will then be som much easier for Big Business to control—but they won't.

We're still wondering who the benevolent boys are. Is it the United States Chamber of Commerce, or the Liberty League, or the Sales Tax promoters? Or is it being paid for out of the same fund that had $50,000 to spare for General Smedley Butler if he would lead a Fascist army on to Washington. We are looking for future copies with much curiosity. We want to know, who pays the freight.

THE FARMERS UNION IS FOR WORLD PEACE

C. C. Talbot, President N. D. Farmers' Union.

In watching the sparring of the representatives of the maritime nations of the world in the London Conference, it is to say the least nauseting. Their entire performance makes me think of the monarchs of old, using their vassals as pawns in the great game of chess.

Why can we not be honest with ourselves and admit frankly and openly that munition makers are not for peace, and regardless of the fact that we are spending millions of taxpayers' money in more preparations for war, creating fear in the minds of the people of all nations? Why can we not be honest with ourselves and insist on the reduction of armaments in all civilized countries which would immediately make for peace in the minds for competing nations.

The Navy is in light of modern education and science, an obsolute and expensive luxury, out of whom no one profits, except the armament makers.

I am for adequate defense. Defensive armaments would be so inexpensive in comparison with offensive armaments. Coast defense with possibly some submarines and submarine chasers, and a fleet of airplanes sufficient to adequately protect our coast line from invasion would be a very small expenditure in comparison with what we are spending for battle ships, which can be sunken far out at sea with modern air fleets.

We are so utterly insincere when we claim we are a peaceable nation and continue to build offensive war machinery that strikes terror to the hearts of the weaker nations and stimulates the stronger nations to compete for supremacy. Then let us take off the mask and frankly admit that we are dominated by the interests who the reckless of human lives and safety and are only greedy to make enormous profits out of the manufacture of offensive war machinery.

PAGING MR. RUNNING.

By Charles H. Hansen in Mpls. Star.

Mr. Running asks, "What has the governor done for the common people?" Governor Olson and his followers have enacted into law:

The homestead tax law, mortgage moratorium law, income tax law, chain store tax, bank reorganization act, created 13 new state forests, regulated sale of state timber, two gas tax evasion laws, got after tax dodgers, $5,000,000 and other relief bills, redistricting measure, metropolitan sewage disposal, oleomargarine law, scientific land use policy, and many other good laws for the benefit of the people.

These are a few of the accomplishments of Governor Olson. Perhaps you read hostile newspapers Get the truth from records of law makers. If you are Running, "he who runs may read." "There are none so blind as those who will not see."

REDUCE FARM DEBT.

A Reader In St. Paul News.

Editor, Daily News: The question of sealing down farm mortgages has been brought up one time after the other during the last few years but nothing has ever been done about it. If all farm mortgages had been reduced 50 per cent three years ago the country would be well on the road to recovery by this time.

The present farm debt, with existing delinquencies, can never be paid and the longer a readjustment is postponed the worse the financial condition of this country is going to get. No farm buildings are being painted or repaired because the owner does not know whether he is going to be able to hold the place or not. We are told that only a little more than 50 per cent of the farms in this country are mortgaged. This may be true, but the other 50 per cent are already in the hands of nonfarmer owners and are being operated by tenants. These farms pay their owners less than 1 per cent on the investment and consequently no improvements are being made.

Let us restore the ownership of farm land to those that spent their years in its development. It is the only possibility for a permanent recovery and a sure preventive of communism. Scaling down farm mortgages was one of Governor Olson's campaign pledges in the recent campaign and we have faith enough in him to believe that he intends to carry out his campaign pledges if there is any possible way. But we also believe that he needs the co-operation of everyone who is vitally interested in this question.

A movement is on foot in this part of the state and is having the backing not only of farmers but some of our leading business men that has for its purpose to ask the next legislature to scale down all loans held by the department of rural credit. Let us hope that it will spread to all parts of the state and that it will also include all loans held by the federal land banks. We also believe that those that have lost their farms through foreclosure during the last three years should be given a chance to get them back.

FARMER-LABOR PRESS SERVICE

By
H. G. Teigan

The Farmer-Labor Party has its 1936 campaign under way. With Farmer-Laborites a single election is not of primary importance. The fight to emancipate the common people from the bondage of Big Business cannot be achieved in one election.

The Farmer-Labor Association is lanching a campaign to build up its units in all parts of the state. Had it not been for the efficiency of the organization it is a certainty that the vicious campaign carried on by the Republican party backed by Big Business organizations, would have been successful.

In addition to increasing the membership of the Farmer-Labor Association, the Farmer-Labor Leader, offical publication of the Farmer-Labor Association will be published as a weekly beginning with this week's issue. Since January, 1930, the Leader has been published on a semi-monthly basis.

Johnston on Leader Staff

In addition to making the official organ a weekly newspaper, C. D. Johnston, well-known politcal writer, has been added to its staff. This will enable the Leader to cover a great deal more ground than heretofore, and will familiarize its readers with its readers with just what is going on in the movement from week to week. Mr. Johnston is a man of much more than average ability and is unquestionably one of the best informed men on poplitics in the statestate moreover, he has been devoted to the progressive cause for many years notwithstanding his long connection with a conservative newspaper in St. Paul.

Notwithstanding the claim of Republican newspapers that the legislature is overwhelmingly anti-Farmer-Labor, the fact that the 1935 legislature will have a larger representation of liberals than any legislature has had since the Farmer-Labor party came into existence. A few weeks ago it was contended that the senate would have a large conservative majority but now it appears that the old partyites will experience som difficulty in organizing that body.

Two Votes Stolen

Conservatives will have a two-votes advantage on organization that they would not have had except for their success in temporarily stealing two senate seats. It seems beyond question that in recounts in the Carver-Scott district and in the 29th ristrict in Minneapolis, fraud was resorted to , to give victory to the conservative candidates. The fight for these seats will, however, be continued and the senate will have to decide whether the "upsets" in a few precincts will justify a complete reversal of the official return, in those districts.

Banco Trial at Moorhead

The trial of J. Cameron Thompson, presdent of the Northwest Bancorporation, at Moorhead, is attracting a great deal of attention. It is little short of astonishing that any state administration would have the courage to undertake prosecution of so-powerful a corporation as either of the two large Banco groups. It is safe to state that no Republcan governor in the history of Minnesota would have dared to attack corporations of this size and influence.

The prosecutein is based upon the Banco's sale of stock for prices based upon fictitious values. Thousands of dollars of stock of the Northwest Bancorporation was sold to inncent purchasers on the corporation was earning profits that did not exist.

W. E. G. Watson of Minneapolis special assistant attorney general is in charge of the prosecution. He is assisted by Roger Rutchick, Garfiield W. Rustad of Moorhead specal assistant attornel general The case is being well handled and will be prosecuted with vigor. The rail will brobably last two or three weeks.

HIGHWAY LEGISLATIVE RECOMENDATIONS

Presented to Governor Floyd B. Olson by N. W. Elsberg, Commissioner of Highways.

Federal Highway Aid in Minnesota

On the basis of present revenue the Minnesota Department of Highways will be unable in 1935 and 1936 to obtain Federal highway aid allotments authorized by Congress. These allotments, as authorized by the Hayden-Cartwright Act, will amount to nearly $7,000,000 for this State in the next two years. This money will not be given to Minnesota unless it is matched dollar for dollar by State funds. If it is not matched here, it will go to increase allotments to other states.

Minnesota's present inability to to match federal funds is due to trunk system made by the 1933 legislature, and the decrease in motor vehicle license fees made a the same time. The effects of the increase in expenses and decrease in revenues were cushioned in 1933 and 1934 by emergency federal highway grants which the State received without any matching obligation. Such grants enabled the Department of Highways to carry on construction in the past biennium. Hardly any construction will be possible in the next biennium . State revenues of the Highway Department are not increased.

The national government's policy on future highway aid was explained by President Roosevelt on signing the Hayden-Cartwright act in June 1934, when he said: "Notice also is given to the 44 state legislatures which convene early next year (1935) that unmatched emergency grants are to be abandoned, and that there is to be a return to the established plan which required that the state shall meet the federal government halfway in paying the cost of new construction."

Therefore, if the Minnesota Legislature wishes this State to receive its share of Federal aid in 1935 and 1936, it must provide additional State Highway revenues. It should be borne in mind that Minnesota will pay the same amount of Federal taxes regardless of any action the Legislature may take. If the federal money goes unmatched, Minnesotans will pay federal taxes to aid road building in other states. If the money is matched, Minnesota will get back from the federal government in the next biennium slightly more than the amount the state will pay in federal gasoline taxes during the same period. Thousands of men who will be given work on the roads if the federal money is spent in the state will have to be provided for in some other manner should these funds not be obtained.

Minnesota ranks near the bottom among the states in the matter of taxes paid by the average motorist.

At the request of the Department of Highways, the United States Bureau of Public Roads has conducted in the past year a comprehensive study of Minnesota's highway problem. The results of this study will be available to the 1935 Legislature.

Additional Trunk Routes

The proposed State constitutional amendment ratifying the 1933 expansion of the trunk system and preventing further additions until the enlarged system shall have been 75 percent permanently improved, failed of adoption at the general election in November, 1934. Since then there have been suggestions that further additions be made to the system at the 1935 Legislative Session.

It is true that certain logical additions to the trunk system were not included in the 1933 expansion. However, the danger is great that if these should be added in 1935, the door will be opened to demands for inclusion of a large mileage of new routes which the Highway Department will not be financially able to maintain. Unwise additions also would invite litigation which might jeopardize the present status of the trunk system. Therefore no proposals for new additions at this time should be granted without the most serious consideration.

Delays in Receipt of Motor Vehicle License Fees

Serious financial embarrassment is caused the Highway Department in those years when the Legislature extends the time for payment of motor vehicle license fees. To enable the Department to meet its obligations. up to the deferred date established for license payments, it is recommended that the Legislature authorize the Department of Highways to anticipate such delayed license fee receipts by borrowing from available state funds.

Untaxed Motor Vehicle Fuels

Improvements in internal combustion motors are making it possible for more and more motor vehicles to use other than gasoline. Such fuels are not subject to the Minnesota Gasoline Tax. It is obviously unjust to tax the gasoine used in most motor vehicles and not to tax a different fuel used in other motor vehicles transporting commodities or the public highways. Remedial legislation is needed.

Drivers License Division

The 1933 Legislature enacted a Drivers License Law and placed it [illegible] sioner of Highways. No adequate administration under the Commis[illegible] was made in the legislation for financing the operation of this act on a permanent basis. Unless such provision is made, an effective administration cannot be provided in the future.

Highway Patrol

Sentiment has been expressed in some quarters that the Highway Patrol be given full police powers. However, control of traffic on our highways has become a matter of such vital public concern that we believe the Highway Patrol should remain primarily a traffic police organization. The Patrol is inadequate in size to cover effectively the enlarged trunk system.

Disbursement of Federal Funds Off the Trunk System

As a measure of cooperation with the United States Bureau of Public Roads, it would be desirable for the Legislature to authorize the Commissioner of Highways to act as agent for this bureau in supervisthe Federal highway construction work not on the trunk system, and also in disbursing the Federal funds for such projects. This would enable the Highway Department to meet requests of the Federal government for closer cooperation in the improvement of roads within national forests and Indian reservations.

Views and Reviews

"The Great American Menace"

"The American public is becoming impatient with militant Communists. This lawless group, a very small percentage of the population, is wearing out the toleration which has shielded it. It creates riots and disturbances from coast to coast. It does not, it will not, understand that 99 per cent of all the people have agreed on ways of living and systems of law protecting persons in their rights to live and own property. Within that rule and system there is and always will be plenty of room for differences and controversy. The Communist exceeds all limitations. (1)

"The public for years has allowed Communistic bodies to hammer at the foundations of the nation because that public was for freedom of speech and action. The thought was that all should have their say. But this was an error. it was never the intention of the fathers that organized groups should be allowed to destroy what they had so laboriously and honestly evolved. (2)

"Organized labor has long since barred Communism. It has erred a little in listening to its doctrines and agitators in times of stress. But that fault was common. Some public officers have cozened them for a few paltry votes which usually were not delivered. Communism in Germany drove that great people to Hitler. Out of the frying pan into the fire. Here people object to both. (3)

"These plotters seek the destruction of all existing law and order. (4) Yet when they are brought to book for some excess they seek legal protection and clothe themselves with rights intended to be shields for those who may be innocent. (5) There are and must be laws to punish the ordinary malefactor.

"Should the laws be used to help those who seek the destruction of the nation? The time is here when Communist treason must be vigorously restrained." Duluth Herald.

This noTORYous sheet of course would be expected to say something editorially like the above; and the Reds make good footballs to kick around thusly to relieve the feelings of those who undertake to be the public conscience. In the recent election it was demonstrated that this feeling was not confined to Communists alone—the Farmer-Laborites came in for considerable editorial mauling around.

This general statement off our chests, we might make a few specific comments, referred to by number:

(1) Marxian Communists know more than any other group, the exact stratification of our society They know that our present society is manifestation of the middle-class, that its laws, customs education, and public opinion are all in favor of the practices by which the middle class exists—namely exploitation of the workers and farmers by means of the profit system. These limitations—imposed by the middle class—are certainly exceeded by the Communists; and the reason is not hard to find.

(2) It was one of the cardinal principles of the Founders that when conditions warranted, and a certain group of rulers became too autocratic, the people could revolt and set up their own government. Much the same conditions that led the colonies to rebel against the Mother Country are now fomenting pressure to make the farmers and workers rebel against their masters, the money-lords and profiteers.

(3) And yet, Hitler is the middle-class personified. Fascism is middle-class armor against workers' and farmers' governments.

Analysis has shown that a middle class never gives up its rights to exploit the workers and farmers without a struggle.

(4) Correct. Law and order, that is, for the middle-class. Occurrences all down through labor history show how much the middle class cares for law and order in its deals with the workers and farmers.

(5) This assumes that all who rebel against the status quo are guilty without a hearing. Thanks to the assiduity of the masters, there are plenty laws which discriminate against the farmer and laborer, and it takes an honest lawyer to unmask their unconstitutionality. The rights of free speech and of the press, and the right peaceably to assemble are too often infringed by the hired watchdogs of the upper class.

When the question arises, "Should the laws be used to help those who seek the destruction of the nation?" I might reply that those who are to blame for the impending destruction of the nation are not in the quarter imagined by the Duluth Herald. Does any sane man believe that a "lawless group, a small percentage of the population," about one percent of all the people, without funds, driven from pillar to post, whacked on the head on occasion by the police, razzed in the press, and generally abused,—does any reasonable man believe that this group could actually cause the destruction of the nation? To believe this is to reaffirm a belief in hobgoblins. The sad part about this persecution of Communists is that they do not deserve it.

No; the real source of danger is in the ranks of the money-lords. They are the real annihilators. They have the power and they are using it for destructive purposes, by devious means they keep a grip on things—one of which is moulding public opinion through the kept press, of which the Duluth Herald is a very good example. Here is the Great American Menace. This is the thing we have to fight—not a small group of Communists. The Profit System must be destroyed! A cooperative society must be put in its place. When this fact sinks in, and stays in, maybe we will begin to get somewhere. As long as the public is taught to vent capitalism, they will have it; when they learn its true nature, they will turn away from it. I, for one, hope that day is not far away.

Minute Sermons

By Dr. Crawford Grays

This Carpenter of Nazareth gave the world not only a new conception of God but also of the individual.

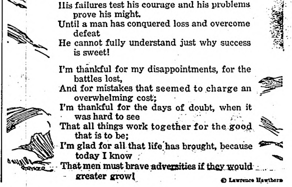
Jesus taught humans have a common origin.

Men, women, young people, the children have one Father and are one family. And slowly but surely through the centuries a growing appreciation of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man has become manifest. Today, finds us with a more Christian attitude to childhood, womanhood, and the individual man. There is a pressing urge of responsibility challenging each one of us to seek each other's good no less than we seek our own.

When John the Baptist sent messengers to Jesus inquiring, "Art Thou the Coming One, or look we for another?" Jesus made answer, "Go and tell John the things which ye hear and see; the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead, are raised and the poor have good tidings."

THAT personified WHAT Jesus was DOING.

Likewise as Christians we should be exemplifying the fruits of Christianity otherwise of what avail all the churches and preaching?



The Test of a Man
by
Lawrence Hawthorne

There's little satisfaction to be gained from doing things
That hold no difficulties; it's the tough old task that brings
Keen sense of worth and power to the man who wins the fight;
His failures test his courage and his problems prove his might.
Until a man has conquered loss and overcome defeat
He cannot fully understand just why success is sweet!

I'm thankful for my disappointments, for the battles lost,
And for mistakes that seemed to charge an overwhelming cost;
I'm thankful for the days of doubt, when it was hard to see
That all things work together for the good that is to be;
I'm glad for all that life has brought, because today I know
That men must brave adversities if they would greater grow!

THE READER'S ROSTRUM

Dear Editor:

Analyzing the cooperative accomplishments of the Rural population during the year of 1934 and passing over the threshold into the new year of 1935, it would probably be fair to pause just for a moment in respect and approval of accomplishments, large and small.

Space in these newspapers are limited so I'm going to pass judgment on one phase of cooperative success during the past year.

The Community Clubs of Pennington County and vicinity have during 1934 made a splendid showing of community cooperative enterprising. These Clubs have during the past year spent considerable time in organization and perfection of social, recreational, and educational activities, which have for their purpose the concentration of community activities. To the extent that Socially they may have something to say about with who, when, and where their children may be found. Recreationally they make it possible for their children to enjoy the national sports close at home. EDUCATIONALLY, if given the moral support of the community folks, and with a well-planned year's program, there is no limit to its Educational possibilities, as it pertains to the best welfare of the rural people.

These activities will have a tendency to keep the community people sufficiently and amply occupied with local enterprises of worth while activities; to refrain from traveling several nights a week seeking enjoyment, many of questionable repute.

During the past year, the Clubs have exchanged a number of well-planned programs which have a far-reaching effect, in stimulating better community Club interest. It also assures the Club's membership of a greater variation of entertainment.

They organized during the past season, a community club Kitten ball league which stimulated a great deal of community club sportmanship. The various clubs have spent considerable time in the past years in preparing a local community booth at the county fair. Enough cooperation can be given to this project to send a creditable exhibit yearly from this County to the State Fair.

The one act play contest which was staged at the auditorium a short time ago by these community clubs, proved a big success, and probably will become a yearly event. The clubs of this vicinity are just about to organize a Federation of Community Clubs, wihch will have for its aim, to encourage, promote and organize such activities as will elevate the standard socially, morally, and educationally of the Rural people.

While the Community clubs are at the present time enjoying a splendid support from the rural people in the communities where these clubs are active, yet they will not do what could be done until such a time as when all the community people take a hold and perfect the Club's activities and the best interest of all concerned.

Yours for more community clubs with a uniform membership.

Paul Engelstad.

WET MACHINE POLITICIANS

Prohibition did not fail. It was wet political machines that failed in the administering of the law. Prohibition was taken out of the Constitution by political methods. It can be put back into the Constitution by political methods. Both Repupblican and Democratic parties are wet; sopping wet. When those who want prohibition put back into the Constitution bad enough to vote a dry ticket from top to bottom, to line up with a dry political party, then it can be had, and this by political methods. This could be done over night" if the millions of voting Christians and drys could only see it, and then act.

Grapefruit Is Traced to China

The grapefruit, so named because it grows in clusters like a bunch of grapes, originated in China before the time of Confucius. It was first brought to America about 100 years ago by a sea captain named Shaddock and was called a Shaddock until recent years.

Cat's Fatal Bite

"Cat scratches and bites are serious," said a doctor at a recent inquest. He added: "They turn septic more frequently than bites and scratches from any other animals. They are more serious than a dog bite."

The Atlantic and Pacific

Waters of the Pacific ocean and those of the Caribbean sea (considered part of the Atlantic), can be seen from the summit of Mt. Izaru, Costa Rica. This is believed to be the only point on the American continents where one may look upon the waters of both oceans.

Trace Eden to Seychelle Islands

According to tradition in the Seychelle islands, in the Indian ocean, midway between Africa and Asia, it was there Adam and Eve had their Garden of Paradise.

PUBLIC SCHOOL

School Lunches That Ring the Bell

SUPPOSE mothers were graded on their school lunch boxes—would you have made all A's last term? Would you have been promoted into a higher grade? Well, it's a new term, and like Johnny who is starting out with his new necktie and his new lunch-box, we have a chance to begin all over again.

If it's true, as tiresome teachers used to tell us, that we never get through learning and we go to school all through life, certainly dietetics is a course which mothers must specialize in from the time youngsters begin to eat until the time they begin to eat away from home. But it's not as easy as mere dietetics. They must major in dietetics and minor in psychology. For not only must the child be offered the correct foods for body building, but he must be led to like these correct foods. And that's not so easy.

Hot Lunch Preferable

For children who come home for lunch or buy a warm lunch in the school lunchroom—and these are the best conditions for the noonday meal—the problem is simpler. For, at home, you have already worked out a way to make the proper foods most attractive and the atmosphere conducive to enjoying the meal. You no doubt have some gay little lunch-cloths—different from the dinner sort—and some cheerful china, which is not necessarily expensive china, but the kind that children enjoy eating from. You have flowers on the table, just as if you were serving Daddy at dinnertime, and you have some interesting things to talk about so that the moments fly merrily along until time to dash back to school. Or if there is a good school lunch-room, you no doubt see that Johnnie gets to eat there often. It is his club. The other fellows eat there—there's lots to talk over; the food is dietetically right and it tastes good because it's a change from home food.

Pack-and-Carry Lunch

But for the child who must carry his lunch to school, we want to make these suggestions which we hope will prove helpful:

First, plan the lunch so that it will be interesting and appetizing in appearance. Include foods which vary in shape, color, flavor and texture. An example of this would be two generous-sized sandwiches wrapped each separately in waxed paper—one red salmon and lettuce on white bread cut in triangles, and the other a cream cheese and pimiento sandwich on whole wheat bread, cut with a circular cookie cutter; a low jar with a lid containing a fruit salad—fresh pineapple, canned pitted cherries and orange slices; a thermos containing a cold malted milk drink, which can be shaken again before drinking, with straws included; and some gay colored cellophane wrapped cookies, or tiny frosted cup cakes.

Second, vary the lunches so that no two days in the week are duplicates in any food on the school-box menu. The way to do this is to make out the weekly menu on Saturday before you send in your grocery order. Or better, still, go into the grocery store on Saturday and look around. You will find all sorts of new and intriguing foods for children—new cookies in tins to keep them fresh, new sandwich spreads in cans, new canned fruit juices, a variety of chocolate malted drinks, and new accessories such as paper napkins, waxed papers, etc., to make the lunch box neat and attractive.

Here are two suggestions for dietetic, delicious lunch-box menus:

Salmon or Tuna Fish Sandwich
Lettuce and Cream Cheese Sandwich
Chocolate Blanc Mange
Dates or Figs
Milk

Deviled Ham Sandwich
Bacon and Tomato S[illegible]
Chocolate Milk [illegible]

School Lunches That Ring the Bell

SUPPOSE mothers were graded on their school lunch boxes—would you have made all A's last term? Would you have been promoted into a higher grade? Well, it's a new term, and like Johnny who is starting out with his new necktie and his new lunch-box, we have a chance to begin all over again.

If it's true, as tiresome teachers used to tell us, that we never get through learning and we go to school all through life, certainly dietetics is a course which mothers must specialize in from the time youngsters begin to eat until the time they begin to eat away from home. But it's not as easy as mere dietetics. They must major in dietetics and minor in psychology. For not only must the child be offered the correct foods for body building, but he must be led to like these correct foods. And that's not so easy.

Hot Lunch Preferable

For children who come home for lunch or buy a warm lunch in the school lunchroom—and these are the best conditions for the noonday meal—the problem is simpler. For, at home, you have already worked out a way to make the proper foods most attractive and the atmosphere conducive to enjoying the meal. You no doubt have some gay little lunch-cloths—different from the dinner sort—and some cheerful china, which is not necessarily expensive china, but the kind that children enjoy eating from. You have flowers on the table, just as if you were serving Daddy at dinnertime, and you have some interesting things to talk about so that the moments fly merrily along until time to dash back to school. Or if there is a good school lunch-room, you no doubt see that Johnnie gets to eat there often. It is his club. The other fellows eat there—there's lots to talk over; the food is dietetically right and it tastes good because it's a change from home food.

Pack-and-Carry Lunch

But for the child who must carry his lunch to school, we want to make these suggestions which we hope will prove helpful:

First, plan the lunch so that it will be interesting and appetizing in appearance. Include foods which vary in shape, color, flavor and texture. An example of this would be two generous-sized sandwiches wrapped each separately in waxed paper—one red salmon and lettuce on white bread cut in triangles, and the other a cream cheese and pimiento sandwich on whole wheat bread, cut with a circular cookie cutter; a low jar with a lid containing a fruit salad—fresh pineapple, canned pitted cherries and orange slices; a thermos containing a cold malted milk drink, which can be shaken again before drinking, with straws included; and some gay colored cellophane wrapped cookies, or tiny frosted cup cakes.

Second, vary the lunches so that no two days in the week are duplicates in any food on the school-box menu. The way to do this is to make out the weekly menu on Saturday before you send in your grocery order. Or better, still, go into the grocery store on Saturday and look around. You will find all sorts of new and intriguing foods for children—new cookies in tins to keep them fresh, new sandwich spreads in cans, new canned fruit juices, a variety of chocolate malted drinks, and new accessories such as paper napkins, waxed papers, etc., to make the lunch box neat and attractive.

Here are two suggestions for dietetic, delicious lunch-box menus:

Let Our Motto Be

GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD
Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

DIET FOR OLDSTERS

WE ARE now at last beginning to think of diet as a preventive of the degenerative diseases of older life, the diseases of the stomach, heart, kidney and pancreas. These diseases of older life are rapidly becoming more of a problem as our life expectancy increases. For instance, in Illinois in 1910 only 32 per cent of the population was over thirty-five years of age. In 1930, the number was 40 per cent—a gain of 8 per cent in 20 years.

In saying diet, however, I hasten to add that this article is not going to present spinach as the cure-all for these older diseases. Older persons may eat spinach "if there be such" as like it, but older people, thank goodness, have no drastic need for vitamins in their diet. It's the youngsters up to twenty years of age or so who must have foods that contain vitamins—who must have their spinach. We oldsters, done with our growing pains, can take it or leave it. And I for one leave it.

But coming back to our problem. No person past thirty-five has the physical tone of the person of twenty. As our muscles begin to show signs of sagging, our hair of thinning and our skin of drying, so do our internal organs lose their tone, in the same relative degree.

Particularly is this true of the digestive tract. The lining of the stomach begins to blanch, and the stomach secretes less acid. As we grow older this deficiency of the stomach to secrete acid affects a greater number of persons. In the forty to forty-five-year age group, the number is 10 per cent to 12 per cent; in the fifty-year group, 20 per cent; in the sixty-year group, 30 per cent to 40 per cent; in the seventy-year group, 60 per cent.

For years there has been controversy between practicing physicians and physiologists as to how this trouble was to be corrected. The physicians believed in relieving their patients by giving some form of acid as a medicine, while the physiologists laughed at them because they said with two or three pints of stomach juices requiring acidifying, it was foolish to think that a few drops of medicine taken by mouth in a glass of water could do the job.

Now, in a series of experiments we have been carrying on in the research laboratories of the University of Illinois, and which we are just now ready to make public, we have found at last that the physician is right. And the physiologist was wrong when he thought stomach acidity was the main factor in digestion. It is not. However, the acidity of the stomach juices has a great deal to do with the health of the individual. For at the laboratory we have proved that when there is no acid secretion in the stomach, the bacteria from the lower intestines can make their way into the upper intestines and the stomach, and the absorbed products can reach the heart and kidneys. And if these latter organs are already showing signs of degenerating, then the addition of these lower intestinal products helps in their still further degeneration.

When the stomach is acid, however, the intestinal bacteria cannot get either into it or the upper intestine. It is as if the stomach acidity made a gate through which the intestinal bacteria cannot pass. With this fact known our problem then was to find how to make the stomach juices acid for anyway two to four hours after eating, when the major work of digestion goes on. We tried many experiments. It was found that synthetic acids such as 1 per cent citric, lactic, hydrochloric, sulphuric—one was as good as another—helped when taken in water at mealtime. But who wants to be taking medicine at every meal?

Foods were tried out. And then through experiment after experiment we proved that a diet rich in acid and poor in alkaline would do the trick.

So in the diet for the older person we can forget vitamins as a factor. It's acidity we are after. Simply eat plenty of lean meat, eggs, butter, fresh fruit, green foods, other fresh vegetables. Go easy on potatoes, however, cereal foods, pastry, other starches, sweets, all fats except butter. I said green foods, you notice. And spinach is a green food. So if you like it, eat it. But there are many other kinds of green foods beside spinach. There are turnip greens and beet greens, chard, asparagus, lettuce, celery and cabbage. Sour kraut is one of the best dishes older persons can eat. Sour kraut juice is good, too, and so are tomato, lemon and pineapple juice. Do not drink much sweet milk, but drink freely of buttermilk.

Of course, diet will not cure a serious vital disease. Such diseases need the care of a physician. But if you have the ordinary intestinal distress that so many persons past forty experience, then try out this diet for a few months. And if you have as yet no symptoms, then this diet will aid you in preventing them.

In any case the diet will do not harm, so it is worth trying.

Volcanic Eruptions

Volcanic eruptions, drought and unusually severe winters are sufficiently striking to be recorded in the history of the world before the establishment of weather organizations by the nations to make a systematic record of the daily variations. If records of volcanic eruptions are traced back through the ages, it will be seen that in many instances dry periods and severe winters followed such occurrences.

Chose Greatest Man

At the beginning of the century Col. William Jackson Armstrong of Columbus, Ohio, who under Grant's administration was inspector of foreign consulates, made a thorough study of all the world's great men, and as a result wrote a book entitled "The Greatest Living Man." Without bias he analyzed the characteristics and achievements that distinguish men as great—the authors, generals, artists, philosophers, actors, scientists, statesmen, inventors, financiers—and came to the conclusion that the greatest living man was a poor lad born at Milan, the lad who was regarded in school as a dullard—Thomas Alya Edison.

PRES. STRESSES REFORM

The foreign situation he reported [illegible] unsettled and tha different nations were shaking off their peace masks to reveal avaricious na[illegible] seeking armament and power. [illegible] hoped that a calm counsel and constructive leadership would provide a steadying influence. That the [illegible] should see that throughout the world, privilege would occupy a lesser place and welfare a greater [illegible]. He maintained that our own peaceful and neighborly attitude toward other countries is beginning to be understood and appreciated.

According to Harry Hopkins federal relief administrator, the state of Minnesota will be expected to raise as its share in its own relief project the tidy sum of $12,[illegible]. However this will include money contributed by communities and municipaltiies, this will be in keeping with state-moments in the President's message to congress.

PROD. CREDIT MEETING

[illegible] are chosen by the Class B stockholders, and are passed upon. They are in turn placed before the advisory committee which is made up of the general agent and Presidents of the four following institutions: The Federal Land Bank, the Bank for Cooperatives, The Federal Intermediate Credit Bank and the Production Credit Corporation. The Federal Land Bank consists of the National Farm Home Association, The Bank for Cooperatives consists of cooperatives who borrow. The Production Credit corporation consists of the Production Credit Association.

Mr. Boie stated that the United States Government, through the Producers Credit Association, has done more for the American Farmer than any other Government in the world. The past slump in loans wasn't due to the banks or the borrowers but due to a 'faulty financial system.' As a result we have abused credit. To the farmers who have become stockholders through loans in the Association he said, "Towards credit we must change our attitute and in this organization we must have the spirit of cooperation. Farmers who have loans should feel responsible towards them. Farming isn't a disgraceful business. It is a basic and fundamental business, a business that takes a sounder knowledge of business than any other type of business institution.

"In Denmark," he continued, "in Denmark and Germany the farmers have an entirely different attitude towards their business. They feel that their business is of the highest class which it is. Denmark is truly a most cooperative nation and it is from this nation that we received our ideas for our Association. Mr. Boie time and again stressed the point that the farmers who have loans should maintain a cooperative idea towards their association because it was upon their attitude upon which depended the success of the Production Credit Association.

Sound loans are not an immergency institution but a business institution which is being run for the farmers and by the farmers. All over Minnesota, North Dakota, Wisconsin and Michigan which comprises of the district, meetings are being held for the purpose of explaining the fundamentals. It is [illegible] upon the machinery set up by the government which has supplied [illegible]0,000,000, in loans to capitalize the Association. From this capitalization they receive the interest, that is the association receives the interest. The President has said that this department is the most efficiently operated of any.

The question submitted to the stockholders for vote was whether or not the Production Credit Association should or should not make loans on home alternations unless the one who asks for the loan takes stock in the Association. It was unanimously decided that anyone applying for a loan must take stock.

The election of the directors for the coming year was held. The nominations for the officers came from the floor. One director for three years, two directors for two years and two directors for one year.

[illegible] was nominated to hold the three year directorship, Hunt and Noper were elected by ballot to fill the directorships for two years and Erdman and Nelson were elected to serve as directors for one year. The meeting was then adjourned. Members in attendence went over to the commercial club rooms in the city auditorium where they were served coffee and doughnuts. Ice Cream was donated by the Land O' Lakes. At lunch the newly elected board of directors met in the sectary's office to transact business.

Ford Program is Chosen The Fourth Outstanding

In a poll conducted among prominent radio critics by the Radio Stars magazine, the Ford Sunday Evening Hour seems to have broken all records for establshing itself. The radio experts usually consider three months the shortest time in which a program can reach satisfactory popularity. The program which rated first has been on the air nine years while the Ford program has been on but a few weeks.

Credit for the sensational start the Ford prpogram seems to have made is generally given to the unusual cast, which consists of the seven-piece Ford Symppony" Orchesra and a mixed chorus of forty-four mixed voices, under the direction of Victor Kolar, and to the brilliance of the guest artists. Another reason was the almost total lack of advertising matter included in the program. The Ford broadcast is heard over the largest network in commercial radio-history.

Why Should Men Loose Faith In Land

By Gilbert Brattland

Many people ask, why men should loose faith in land and it is a very intriguing question about which volumes have and could be written. They have not. No matter how far one may be removed in his line of work or in his location from the soil, in every one there is an inheritance of a subconscious urge that actuates life in all its fundamentals, and that is land and all that it represents. Whether one may be in a dusty sky-scrapper, in the factory or in the factory or on the office, you will find most often some indication of that instinct in the rustic painting, sketch or picture on the wall, the flowering plant in the window or the little tree on the lawn or in the backyard. It is an old primal urge and at no time is it stronger than in the spring when nature reblossoms her whole domains with leaf and flowers and growing beauty. No matter how artificial or wordly you may be, yet you findyourselflistening to that persistent call to the soil and its growing things.

Why then should men loose faith in land? There will be no more land. Our population is increasing. Of good land there is little. Land preceeded and will succeed us. When we are gone it still remains to the generations that follow us. Pioneers have blazed trails to the wildernesses, have indured its sufferings and braved it's dangers that they might find a plot of soil which they could call home. It is the safest insurance policy in the world, for, if those who follow you will do as you have done, it will do for them what it has done for you. Without raw wealth, production ceases. If production ceases, society disintegrates. All raw wealth must come from nature's storehouse of soil, sunshine, air and water. All these have their workshop on and in the soil. Soil is the comon denominator of all that we do. No matter how you may try, you cannot divorce your dependance from the soil.

Kansas Farmers' Unions Ask Rail Rate Reform

The Committee of Kansas Farm Unions held a regular meeting in Topeka, Kansas, December 15, 1934. The Committee of Kansas Farm Organizations represents the Kansas Farmers Union, Kansas State Grange, Kansas State Farm Bureau Federation, Farmers Cooperative Grain Dealers Association, Kansas Wheat Marketing Association Farmers Union Jobbing Association, and Farmers Cooperative Commission Company. At this meeting a resolution was adopted to the effect that they would recommend a modification of section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act so that, subject to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the transcontinental railways may be allowed to increase their Pacific Coast traffic and revenues by being permitted to make lower charges for such Pacific Coast traffic, even though such charges may be less than the charges for a shorter haul

PRES. STRESSES REFORM

The foreign situation he reported was unsettled and tha different nations were shaking off their peace masks to reveal avaricious nations seeking armament and power. He hoped that a calm counsel and constructive leadership would provide a steadying influence. That the nations should see that throughout the world, privilege would occupy a lesser place and welfare a greater place. He maintained that our own peaceful and neighborly attitude toward other countries is beginning to be understood and appreciated.

According to Harry Hopkins federal relief administrator, the state of Minnesota will be expected to raise as its share in its own relief project the tidy sum of $12,000,000. However this will include money contributed by communities and municipalties, this will be in keeping with state-moments in the President's message to congress.

members are chosen by the Class B stockholders, and are passed upon, they are in turn placed before the advisory committee which is made up of the general agent and Presidents of the four following institutions: The Federal Land Bank, the Bank for Cooperatives, The Federal Intermediate Credit Bank and the Production Credit Corporation. The Federal Land Bank consists of the National Farm Home Association, The Bank for Cooperatives consists of cooperatives who borrow. The Production Credit corporation consists of the Production Credit Association.

Mr. Boie stated that the United States Government, through the Producers Credit Association, has done more for the American Farmer than any other Government in the world. The past slump in loans wasn't due to the banks or the borrowers but due to a 'faulty financial system.' As a result we have misused credit. To the farmers who have become stockholders through loans in the Association he said, "Towards credit we must change our attitute and in this organization we must have the spirit of cooperation. Farmers who have loans should feel responsible towards them. Farming isn't a disgraceful business. It is a basic and fundamental business, a business that takes a sounder knowledge of business than any other type of business institution.

"In Denmark," he continued, "in Denmark and Germany the farmers have an entirely different attitude towards their business. They feel that their business is of the highest class which it is. Denmark is truly a most cooperative nation and it is from this nation that we received our ideas for our Association. Mr. Boie time and again stressed the point that the farmers who have loans should maintain a cooperative idea towards their association because it was upon their attitude upon which depended the success of the Production Credit Association.

Sound loans are not an immergency institution but a business institution which is being run for the farmers and by the farmers. All over Minnesota, North Dakota, Wisconsin and Michigan which comprises of the district, meetings are being held for the purpose of explaining the fundamentals. It is operating upon the machinery set up by the government which has supplied $0,000,000, in loans to capitalize the Association. From this capitalization they receive the interest, that is the association receives the interest. The President has said that this department is the most efficiently operated of any.

The question submitted to the stockholders for vote was whether or not the Production Credit Association should or should not make loans on home alternations unless the one who asks for the loan takes stock in the Association. It was unanimously decided that anyone applying for a loan must take stock.

Ice Cream was donated by the Land O' Lakes. At lunch the newly elected board of directors met in the sectary's office to transact business.

The Board stulied maps of county roads to make even approppriations for each district. The average cost of maintaining a county road per mile is $60. Mr. Torgerson, Division Engineer of the State was here and pointed out that this county had fine roads and that the money they received should be expended in gravelling them. Ford Program is Chosen The Fourth Outstanding

In a poll conducted among prominent radio critics by the Radio Stars magazine, the Ford Sunday Evening Hour seems to have broken all records for establshing itself. The radio experts usually consider three months the shortest time in which a program can reach satisfactory popularity. The program which rated first has been on the air nine years while the Ford program has been on but a few weeks.

Credit for the sensational start the Ford prpogram seems to have made is generally given to the unusual cast, which consists of the seven-piece Ford Symphony Orchesra and a mixed chorus of forty-four mixed voices, under the direction of Victor Kolar, and to the brilliance of the guest artists. Another reason was the almost total lack of advertising matter included in the program. The Ford broadcast is heard over the largest network in commercial radio history.

THIEF RIVER FALLS FORUM

VOLUME THREE NUMBER 41 · THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA. · THURSDAY JANUARY 17, 1934

GOV. F. B. OLSON GIVES PROGRAM TO LEGISLATURE

Senator Sullivan Introduces Bill Adolishing Real Estate Taxes

By Lieut. Gov. Hjalmar Peterson

Lieutenant Governor of Minnesota

The opening of the Forty-Ninth session of the Minnesota Legislature saw the conservatives take control of both houses though not by sufficent majorities to override the Governor's veto.

In the House, in the big test of strength on the organization of that body, George W. Johnson, Duluth job printer, the conservatives' choice for speaker, received 82 votes to 19 for Harold Barker, date of the liberal forces. Mr. Johnson was placed in nomination by Representative A. J. Powers of Mahnomen ,while Mr. Barker was nominated by Representative Chas T. Wangensteen of Chisholm.

In the Senate the first test came in the vote on the slate for the powerful rules committee presented by conservative faction, led by Senator Charles N. Orr of St. Paul. The vote was 43 for the conservative slate, with 23 liberals voting in opposition. Senator Fay Cravens Milaca editor, one of the liberal group, was confined to his appartment in St. Paul by illness and thus was unable to vote.

Senator Victor E. Lawson, Willmar publisher, sounded the battle cry of the liberal forces in opposition to the rules committee slate with this challenge: "Some day the progressives are going to organize this Senate.

"We ask and expect that a fair working majority will be allotted to us upon the important committies of the Senate,—and for this right, if necessary, we are prepared to battle with every ounce of strength we can muster."

Olson Urges Social Reforms

A program of sweeping social legislation was advocated by Governor Floyd B. Olson in his bienniel message before a joint meeting of the Senate and the House on the second day of the session. The governor asked for $10,000,000 in relief funds, tax exemption for home steads up to $4,000, or the taxable valuation reduced to 10 per cent, fixed minimum prices for farm produce, and higher income, inheritance, gross earnings and chain store taxes. He advocated legislation to enable the state to carry out its part in the federal program of rural electrification and urban and rural housing projects, and asked that municipalities owning electric power plants be given authority to extend lines beyond their boundaries without mileage restrictions.

Two important surprises were contained in the governor's message: he advocated that the one-house legislative system be adopted in Minnesota and recommended that, in view of certain criticism of the Conservation department, an investigation be made of that department. He suggested that the Legislature appoint an investigating committee comprising the head of the Minnesota Division of the Izaak Walton League, the President of the Minnesota Game Protective League, and the head of the forestry department of the University of Minnesota.

With regard to agriculture, the governor asked that the Mortgage Moratorium Act "be so amended as to provide that whenever the owner-occupant of a farm seeking court relief from mortgage foreclosure, or eviction . . . offers to turn over to the owner of the mortgage upon such farm, one fourth of the crop production of such farm for the calendar year as a payment to apply upon existing indebtedness to such mortgagee, it shall become mandatory upon the court to restrain any attempted foreclosure or eviction.

Crop Payments Advocated

"I also recommend that the Rural Credit bureau be authorized to sell farms owned by the state upon a crop-payment plan comparable to the present and customary leasing process.

"In my opinion the foregoing proposals for payment by the farmer of his obligations in kind instead of cash will not only give him adequate security for the retention of his home, but will give him other economic advantages in that his creditors will have a share with the farm debtor all the uncertainties of production, price and markets. Many groups now opposed indirectly to the demands of agriculture will lend more assistance toward remedying the inequalities from which agriculture is now suffering."

Governor Olson proposed that the people be permitted to vote upon a constitutional amendment which would give Legislature power to "engage the state in the general operation of public utilities, packing plants and other key industries."

Richard Rice of Alvarado, who was elected senator from the 67th district comprising Marshall, Roseau and Kittson counties in the November elections, has been appointed a member of the powerful Senate Finance Committee. The appointment is considered a recognition of Mr. Rice's ability, as it is rarely that a legislator is given a seat on this important committee in his first term.

W. E. DAY LEADS M. WALDAL BY SEVEN BALLOTS

Judge To Render Decision On A Few Disputed Ballots

Tuesday marked the completion of the Day-Waldal hearing before Judge Torrance of Bemidji with Day leading with half dozen votes, however after District Judge Torrance has given his decision upon a few doubtful ballots which apparently will give Day a lead of approxamately nine votes. In the meantime no definite number of votes can be given until Judge Torrance has filed his decision the latter part of this week. Then if it is favorable as expected the files and records and testimony in the case will be sent to the House of Representatives in the Legislature where the final decision will be rendered. The matter will be referred to the Election committee ... in turn will make a report upon the matter and a final vote will be taken upon the question. Just how soon it will be decided upon by the House is not certain but it is estimated that in the next two or three weeks it will be known.

Dist. NRS Personel Meet Here Saturday

Officials from all eight counties in District 1 met at the District office in the auditorium Saturday with Don Snyder, District Manager, as Chairman.

The meeting was one of the regular monthly meetings held by the officials and their staff to discuss job oportunities and become better aquainted with conditions in their district. At this meeting training of personnel and the new Public Works program which is expected to be announced in the near future also came in for discussion. It is believed that the supervision of the new works program will be handled through the present set up, according to Howard Davidson, County Manager.

NRS offices are maintained in each county each under the supervision of the District Management in its particular district, these again being under the supervision of the State NRS headquarters. National headquarters are maintained in Washington D. C. The National Gov. has provided funds required to meet the payrolls of the NRS, quarters and equipment being provided by local and county governments. A bill is to be presented to the state legislature now in session where under the State will aid in the maintenance of these offices, Mr. Davidson said.

National Re-employmeat Service Shows That 981 Placements Have Been Made in private industry, the majority of the 2200 applicants of the local office have been offered and taken at some time or another during the year. Some applicants have been placed on as many as a dozen jobs, the majority of which have been temporary.

Most of this work was largely seasonal and of a temporary nature, according to Mr. Davidson who states that many of the workers have been laid off with one advent of cold weather. He states that, altho the majority of the farmers are not in need of additional work aid this winter, the unemployment situation in the city itself is much the same as last year at this time. It is pointed out in his report that many persons who had reserves at that time have since found it necessary to apply for Federal aid.

Skilled workers on bridge building or road construction have been placed on public works and highway jobs, not only in Pennington county but in adjoining counties and Reemployment districts where they are placed through the state labor clearance system.

2044 CARLOADS OF HAY SHIPPED FROM HERE

The drought in other parts of the nation has made this part of Minnesota one of the greatest feed centers in the history of this country. Due to the abundant crop of hay the railroads and private trucking concerns have continually been exporting hay to stricken regions. The total exports of the railroads in this city total to the figure of 2044 carloads of hay and straw. No definite figures are available from all the different trucking lines.

The past four years have shown a decided increase in production and in exports of Hay. This year the exportation has proved to be a profitable business enterprise for many persons. And at the same time the hay crop here has benifited farmers in the drought area.

The price paid for hay has tempted many farmers to sell a considerable share of their crop only to find that towards spring they will have to purchase hay to carry over the first hay crop in May.

BERVE OBJECTS TO THE UNJUST SALARY STROKE

Refuses to Carry On Illegal Rental Policy of Tax Delinquent Lands

A ruling was made in an opinion of the Attorney Generals, that the County Attorney had absolutely no legal authoirty to rent out tax delinquent lands. Such rentals should be handled thru the County Auditors office with which the county attorney had nothing to do. Mr. Berve offered to take care of Rent Attachments and all legal work but refused to rent land that was tax delinquent, as he had no legal authority to perform such an action. It was under these circumstances that Mr. Berve felt that the action of the County Board in cutting his salary $300 was unjustified and utterly unreasonable.

Paul A. Lundgren, a former county attorney, received a salary of $1500 a year and the county attorneys' for the past ten to fifteen years have been receiving a like salary.

Saturday a notice was filed with County Auditor Fowler that an appeal to the district court from the action of the county board in fixing his salary at $1200, be made.

A hearing is scheduled to be held at a special term of court Friday, January 25, at 10 o'clock in the morning at which time Mr. Berve will ask the court to fix his salary as provided by the law.

FOWLER PRES. OF CO. AUDITOR ASSOCIATION

Organization Urges Drastic Tax Reforms at St. Paul Meeting

At the annual convention of County Auditors held in Lowry Hotel St. Paul, January 15-16, Harry L. Fowler, County Auditor who had served as vice-president of the County Auditors Association was elected its president. Mr. Fowlers active part in the association and his wide knowledge on tax affairs has gained him wide recognition on matters relating to the duties of a County Auditor.

Mr. Fowler gave an address Tuesday on "Delinquent taxes and Tax Laws." in which he explained that under the present tax laws a taxpayer who comes in 10 days late with his money is forced to pay an 8 percent penalty, while the man who waits five years has no penalty to pay and besides is allowed to settle for 50 percent of the original tax.

Clarification of the tax laws so that they can be understood also will be urged upon the legislature, it was agreed.

The association will ask that taxpayers be allowed a discount for prompt payment. The discount would start at 10 percent and graduated down 1 per cent per month. Restoration of the interest rate of 8 percent on delinquent taxes instead of the monthly penalties, repeal of all tax moratoriums and forfeiture of land to the state in trust at the expiration of five years after the date of delinquency was also urged.

Legion Will Annonce Winners January 25

Final tallying of the results of the local American Legion Membership drive which was scheduled for the fourth of this month has been postponed because of the illness of some of the members on the competing teams.

The postponment was probably welcomed by both teams for it will be in the nature of a repreve for one or the other under the terms of the contest, the losing team will spend a specified time in jail be subjected to jeers from the winners.

A final check up will be made January 25.

Tungseth and Waldal Vote Reactionary on Legislature Set-Up

The progressive 65th district, which gave an overwhelming majority to Governor Olson and all other Farmer-Labor candidates, as well as electing both of the Farmer-Labor candidates to the House of Representatives though with smaller margins, did not show up very progressive in the voting on the organization of the House and the Senate.

In the House, Representative Lewis Herfindahl of Benson, objected to Marius Waldal being permitted to vote because of the fact that he faces an undecided contest brought by W. E. Day of Bagley, who was actually elected, but was cheated out of his seat by the Clearwater county canvassing board who certified Waldal about fifty votes more than he actually received in that county. The conservatives contended that Waldal holds the certificate of election and therefore should be allowed to vote. He voted for Geo. Johnson, the conservative choice for speaker.

In the Senate, Senator E. L. Tungseth went down the line with the conservatives on the organization of that body, voting to strip the Farmer-Labor Lieutenant Governor of his committee appointive powers and for the conservative slate of committee appointments in spite of the fact that he campaigned as a Farmer-Laborite and in his campaign speeches declared himself in favor of the entire Farmer-Labor program.

'Prowlers' Win 76-9 Over Warren; Play E. Grand Forks Jan. 25

The Prowlers showed their ability last Friday evening in a set-to with Warren by running up a score of 76 to 9. The Prowler B squad, not to be outdone, handed the Warren B squad a handy pasting; showing up some classy material for the future.

With the present record under their belt the Prowlers should go into the next three games with enough confidence to carry them over a few rough spots. They will meet Bemidji there on Jan. 18, Cass Lake at Cass Lake on the following day, January 19, and East Grand Forks here on January 25.

RED RIVER VALLEY HISTORY PAGENT WILL BE PRESENTED AT ANNUAL WINTER SHOWS

An elaborate pageant depicting the history of the Red River Valley will be one of the most important features of the silver anniversary celebration of the Northwest School Farmers' Week and Red River Valley Winter Shows. Thirteen Red River Valley counties are expected to take part in the pagent each county presenting some outstanding scene relating to the rapid development which has taken place in Northwestern Minnesota. The plan includes the appointment of a pagent director in each county director will then select the personnel and the supervise the presentation of the scene for that particular county.

According to present plans, this will be the most elaborate historical pageant ever presented in the Northwest. An unusual amount of historical material is available as indicated by the prelimainry reports issued from time to time by the various county historical associations. Futhermore, numerous local and county pagents have been presented, this indicating special interest in such a subject.

The pageant is to be presented at one of the large mass meetings one evening during Winter Shows Week. The central committee has announced unusual interest on the part of those counties which have been approached. Superintendent Theodore C. Blegen of the Minnesota Historical society has offered the full cooperation of his organization.

Safety Observed in All Gravel Pit Operations

Gravel pit operations will hence forth only be permitted where requirements of the safety division are observed in protecting the workers, it is announced by Walter F. MacGregor, state engineer and director of the works dicision of the Minnesota SERA.

This employment exposes the workman to greater danger than almost any other kind of SERA enterprise, Mr. MacGregor explained. Nevertheless, at about 70 pits, only five injuries have been caused from accidents.

Regular inspections will be maintained through the safety division. Therefore, if the foreman of a project fails to carry out the suggestions from the safety inspector, work will be suspended and the men transferred to some other location where the rules are obeyed.

The works division will not countenance speed at the sacrifice of safety, Mr. MacGregor stated.

BLISTER RUST CONTROL AREAS ARE ESTABLISHED

In Minnesota's fight to save the state's remaining stands of white pine from the blister rust fungus disease, the entire northeastern section of the state comprising 18 counties has been set aside as blister rust control areas. By order of E. V. Willard, Commissioner of Conservation, no currant or gooseberry bushes of any species may be planted in these restricted areas without written permission of the state department of conservation.

Included in the restricted areas are Whitewater State park in the southeastern part of the state and Lindbergh State park at Little Falls. Control areas extended 900 feet from these restricted sections.

State and federal conservation agencies are cooperating in the "suppression and control of the blister rust disease by eradicating wild and cultivated currants and gooseberies, whwich are alternate host plants of the disease," Commissioner Willard stated. Eradication work is being confined to forested areas where whitepin estands are found, he said.

During the year 1934, 35,795 man-days were expended in removing 12,925,289 currant and gooseberry bushes from 70,623 acres of land to protect 29,832 acres of pipe, according to L. B. Ritter of the state forest service, in direct change of this work.

Funds from the federal Public Works Administration are partly financing this work of blister rust control in the state. Members of the Civilian Conservation Corps doing Emergency Conservation Work are also being used in state, national and Indian forests and in state parks. Some eradication work is also being done on privately owned lands.

LABOR PPARTY'S CANDIDATES RETURNED IN CALGARY, CAN.

CALGARY, Alberto—T. B. Riley, Labor candidate for Commissioner, was elected by a majority of 2,100 over the conservative nominee here. The Labor party also returned two of its candidates to the city council, and the Independent Labor party returned one.

The victory was the sweeter to local labor supporters because of an unparalled campaign of personal abuse which had been directed against them in the Calgary Herald, supporter of conservative candidates.

That's System

"Some folks' idea of playin' a game fair," said Uncle Eben, "is to let every man bring his own loaded dice and wait foh his chance to slip 'em into action."

LEARN BOTH EROSION CONTROL, FOREST WORK

Many members of the Civilian Conservation Corps in camp near Orr are receiving a thorough course in two branches of conservation, soil erosion control and practical forestry, according to Robert T. Smith, in charge of Emergency Conservation Work in state forests.

A majority of the members of this company were formerly located at Caledonia where they engaged in fighting soil erosion. They are at present working on roadside clearing which will tend to remove much dead and down timber and debris eliminating a dangerous fire hazard in and surrounding their new location.

"Those members are fortunate who are having the privilege of graining valuable experience in both types of conversation work in their CCC enrollments," Mr. Smith said.

Strictest Curtailment of Relief Allowance Cited

The necessity for strictest economy in relief activities has been impressed upon all county relief workers in an official communication from B. E. Youngdahl, director of the social service division of the Minnesota SERA.

In his letter, expenditures have been ordered reduced to cover only absolute essenitals, commensurate with discretion and good judgement. Every effort must be directed, Mr. Youngdahl states, towards the lowering of allowances to a level of minimum needs, in order that the most effective use may be found for available funds. Relief must be granted in a manner calculated to be of greatest benefit to the deserving.

Even legitimate requests for aid must be pared. Only where justification for relief exists, may new cases be added to the rolls. Old cases are to be carefully reviewed and all ineligibles eliminated immediately.

New Stock Feed Policy Goes into Effect Jan. 1

The turn of 1935 marked that beginning of the new livestock feed plan adopted by the Minnesota SERA, eliminating distribution from central depots and substituting a system of furnishing disbursing orders negociable at stores of commercial dealers, it is announced by L. P. Zimmerman, acting administrator.

He warns that needy farmers may experience a brief interval of feed shortage, unless merchants of the state have sufficient stocks on hand to meet the demand. If local dealers are unable to supply the feed or cannot meet the current prices, the Department of Agriculture may again ask the SERA rural rehabilitation division to open feed depots.

"We cannot endanger livestock anywhere in the state by permitting a lack of feed to ensue," Mr. Zimmerman added.

Minnesota Leads in Fed. Duck Stamp Tax Sales

Latest reports from the United States Bureau of Biological Survey list Minnesota in the lead among the states in the sale of the new waterfowl conservation has been paid into federal revenue channels by duck stamp purchasers for the open season of 1934-1935 the report stated.

"It is pleasing to note that Minnesota continues to take a commanding lead in watrfowl conservation work," Erling Swenson, director of the state division of Game and Fish, said. "Our state leads with 40,000 federal duck stamps sold."

Wisconsin was in second place with 35,341 stampps sold and Illinois stood third with 30,311.

Ninty per cent of the fund received will be used to acquire and improve migratory waterfoul refuges in a nation-wide program to restore wild life.

URGE GAME BREEDERS TO RENEW LICENSES

Current licenses of Minnesota's game breeders expired December 31. The state division of Game and Fish urges all breeders of game to renew their licenses promptly.

Prompt filing of all reports pertaining to game breeding in the state is requested by Charles McFarlane, Deputy Director of the Division.

Transients Form Self-Governing Camp Body

One hundred Twin City transients now housed in the camp on the shore of Lake Shetek, in Murray county, have voluntarily imposed upon themselves the most rigid rules of personal conduct.

The men have come from various walks of life, including the legal profession, with two representatives. The latter drafted, by request, a set of strict commandments which govern the every-day routine.

A court also has been set up to mete out stern justice, should anyone act contrary to the peace and dignity of the camp a provided in its code of rules.

THERE'LL BE NO CHANGE IN NAME IF WE CAN PREVENT IT

"The Independent heartily agrees with Editors Cramer (Minneapolis Labor Review) and Lockhart (St. Paul Union Advocate)", says Oscar Widstrand, editor of the St. Louis County Independent in a footnote to a reprint of strenuous objections against the changing of the name of the Farmer-Labor Party made by the Twin City labor editors. And Cramer. Lockhart and Widstrand are absolutely right. We know that any attempt to change the party name will meet with hostility in the Ninth District. Here the battle which culminated in the forming of the Farmer-Labor party out of the bleeding remnants of the Farmers' Non-Partisan League and the Working People's Non-Partisan League originated. The battle which we put up to form the present organization earned us the title "The Fighting Ninth" and altho the past elections had many side issues which broke our legislative representation wide-open, our vote for governor and for the other state officers as well as the large plurality with which we sent Buckler to Congress shows that we are still up and at 'em

And that is not all, we are getting thoroughly fed up with the activities of the band-wagon jumpers and the All-Partyites and we advise that those gentry be prepared for a battle royal at the next state convention for we are going down to clean house. The Farmer-Labor Association for Farmer-Laborites will be our slogan and we will give no quarter.

THE TAXPAYER GETS A REFUND

During our sojourn in St. Paul as an employee of the 1933 House of Representatives, we were often struck by the ruthless and savage way in which interests which enjoyed a monopoly would strike at any attempt to curtail their power to extort the people. It seemed to us that having enjoyed a monopoly for long periods and by virtue of that, having built up huge reserves, they would be better able to meet competition on a live and let live basis than those who had always had keen competition to contend with, and would have less cause for becoming panicky.

In our many years experience in business, both as an employee and as employer we have always mingled with people who had competition and always has had competition to meet. We have found that the average businessman will meet competition philosophically, hewing as close as possible to the line, but refusing to do business for less than cost merely to keep the other fellow from getting the business. Business done on this basis seldom engenders any deep-seated animosity.

When we started this newspaper, we entered the field believing that there was as much legitimate room for two newspapers in Thief River Falls as there is for fourteen grocery stores. We still think so, but if those that do not share our opinion continue with their big business tactics it will prove that we are wrong and that there will be only one paper; the Forum, for it is not our blood that is being let. We are not doing the official printing for less than composition cost. In the meantime the taxpayers are getting back some of the money that was stolen from them under protection of the law in the past, when there was no competition.

GOVERNOR OLSON CLARIFIES OUR PHILOSOPHY

The daily press would make the people believe that when Governor Olson speaking before the State Association of Farmers Mutual Insurance companies at the Hotel Ryan last Thursday, declared that cooperatives would follow state ownership of utilities, he was hedging on the Farmer-Labor platform. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The Farmer-Labor philosophy is a distinct product of the hopes, aims and aspirations of the rural Middle West, and has as its fundamental basis the philosophy of producer-consumer cooperatives. It is a seperate philosophy, differing from the philosophy of the Socialists and Communists, these latter exemplifying the hopes, aims and aspirations of the working class in the congested industrial areas. The Socialist doctrine if we understand it correctly, is committed to government ownership and operation thru, commissions and bureaus. We do not know whether that is the doctrine of Karl Marx or not for we have not studied him enough to pass an opinion, but it is the doctrine which has been fostered by the Labor parties of England, the Scandinavian countries and America. It would mean simply Bureaucracy. On the other hand the Communist doctrine as exemplified in the Russian system, means industrial representation, each factory with its own Soviet and representatives of these forming higher Soviets etc. (We may be called on this by some of the Socialists and Communists, but if we are mistaken we are willing to be called to order.) These groups look with something of disdain upon the theories of Thomas Jefferson, and yet his theories of government (that the least possible government is the best) is more nearly the basis of the Farmer-Labor philosophy.

As we understand the Farmer-Labor philosophy and as we understand Governor Olson's statement to the Mutual Insurance men, the government would take over the basic industries and monopolized utilities and set up within them the machinery for self-government for public service, eliminating the profit motive. Thus with banks being cooperatively operated no banking department would be necessary. With the railroads cooperatively operated as proposed by the Plumb Plan some years ago, no Railroad and Warehoue Commission would be needed. The same principle would hold true all down the line of industry.

With the need for governmental regulation and control of private greed and graft eliminated, nine tenths of the functions of present day government in the United States would fall away and we would be back to what Thomas Jefferson advocated, a simple, representative republican government concerned primarily with broad principles of human deportment, education and police duties.

Certainly this philosophy has nothing in common with the philosophies of Bureaucracy nor Soviets and is as truly and typically American in its conception as Thomas Jefferson was truly the greatest of Americans.

MINNESOTA NOW GIVES COURSE IN TEETOTALISM

A temperance course, made mandatory in the public schools by the State Legislature, is being given this year in Minnesota.

The drys concentrated on writing the requirements into law when repeal of prohibition was passed by the state legislature last January.

The Liquor Control Act specifies that the control commissioner shall assist the state department of education in preparing a state course showing "the effects of alcohol upon the humans system, upon character and upon society."

The course is being studied by pupils in connection with their health or hygiene course. It is taught from the seventh grade to the senior year of high school. It deals with the subject in relation to personal and public health, individual and group responsibilities for social efficiency and social progress, and individual and community safety. Personal abstinence is held up as desirable, and the purpose of the temperance movement in America is explained. The course requires about ten hours of classrom work a year.

FARM and MARKET

BY
R. A. Trovatten, Minnesota Commissioner of Agriculture Dairy and Food

For the first time in the history there is a concerted effort on foot to bring about cheap power and light for the farmer, to be accomplished, of course, through a system of municipal plants, aided by the development of our natural resources. This will be manifested in the coming Congress of the United States as well as the Minnesota State Legislature. Up to the present time, the problem of constructing rural power lines is left to the power trust, and the power trust has not seen fit to extend its lines in sparsely settled rural communities. The power trust claims that it is not practical, from a profit paying angle, to construct rural power lines in farming sections where there are less than 4 farm families to the mile. It points out that the average in Minnesota is about 2 farms to the mile. However this is the power trust's viewpoint based upon the angle of profit and upon the matter of profit depends the payment of huge salaries for company heads as well as dividends on water stock.

Senator Shipstead has announced that he will introduce a bill in the coming session of Congress which will set up a three-man board for the study of rural electrification and which will exercise the right of eminent domain in the name of the United States government; rent, purchase or erect transmission lines, build dams, reservoirs, and power houses and sell the current generated thereby. The proposed bill points out that in addition to encouraging and facilitating the use of electricity by rural consumers, the government will aid farmers in acquiring electric equipment and materials: Such equipment will be furnished to farmers at a reasonable cost.

At the same time it is reported that a bill giving the government control over holding companies for the purpose of cutting electric rates will also be introduced in Congress. President Roosevelt is said to be heartly in favor of both bills, which is quite natural. The president has always opposd the power trust. It is acknowledged that the President and the power trust have been open enemies since his first campaign for governor of New York state. His Tennessee Valley power development has widened the breach still farther. With further federal plans for power development, including the proposed upper Mississippi Valley project, it looks as if the end of the power trust reign is at hand, with the consequent cheapening of power and the possibility of nation-wide farm electrification.

In the meantime, regardless of what the Minnesota Legislature does relating to rural electrification we might take advantage of the laws existing on our own statute books. We have many municipal power plants within our state. The last Legislature granted the extension of power lines to a radius of 25 miles, about which this column will have more to say in future releases.

SEES PROFIT-MAKING AS THE CHIEF CRIME CAUSE

By C. F. Dight

Amid all the talk about crime and plans to check it, it is amazing that so little is done to remove its chief cause which is private profit-making.

There is no crime so great nor act so mean but that is done for profits. Consider almost any mean act and it will be found that the motive behind it is profits.

Anything in a civilization which is the chief cause of crime and meanness should be abolished or strictly regulated. If we were to produce for use and for social profits only under a co-operative commonwealth, it would give employment and economic security to all people and would no doubt prove to be the best crime preventive.

Here is at least one minister who appreciates the editor. At a recent editorial convention, a Kansas minister is reported to have offered the following toast:

"To save an editor from starvation, take his paper and pay for it promptly.

"To save him from bankruptcy, advertise in his paper liberally.

"To save him from despair, send him every item of news you can get hold of.

"To save him from profanity, write your correspondence plainly on one side of the sheet and send it in as early as possible.

Snake Venom a Mystery

The question why snake venom is poisonous is still unanswered by science. It has been found the venom is composed of mucus and debris from membrane cells, carbon, sulphur, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, some fatty matter and salts, but the mixture shows no trace of poison when analyzed by chemists. Venom varies in color with the kind of snake. The cobra's is white, the water moccasin's bright orange, that of the Texas rattler resembles melted butter, and the fer de lance has a greenish venom.

Marx and Remarx, Hash and Rehash

Electronic Energy

Just for that, we shall go scientific for a while. The immense interest being displayed in "splitting the atom" takes on many turns. Scientists come out with the claim that when we learn the secret of releasing electronic force in the atom we shall be able to get more energy out of a handful of coal dust than we now do out of a ton of coal; and that a drop of water contains stupendous power.

A recent story assumed that atomic power had been in use for years. But mysteriously, certain atoms refused to be broken down into electrons. While scientists puzzled over this, the Solar System began undergoing a terrifying change: the sun was losing its vitality, the planets their gravitational force, and in short the whole system was falling to pieces. The earth began describing a parabola towards the outermost reaches of space, the icy polar caps advanced towards the equator, people died off by the thousands machines were falling to pieces, and the seas were freezing over.

Enter our hero—a young scientist who divined the cause of the catastrophe, and hurriedly constructed electrical machinery to combat it. As gravity was disappearing, his machinery was in imminent danger of flying to pieces any minute, but he stuck to the job, and was at last rewarded by seeing the sun again, and the planets in their places. He had restored the Solar System to normalcy—a tough job even for the hero of a ppseudo-scientific story.

When is was all over, and the populace flocked about the savior of his country, the lad made the explanation that some outside Force, in the Larger existence, had also evidently discovered the process of Atomic Disintegration, and had taken the atom known as the Solar System into their machine. But on account of our hero, the Solar System proved to be one of the stubborn atoms, and was ejected.

This new conception of the universe in one of the wonders of the 20th century, and indicates the importance of one man when his Solar System is but an atom in the Larger Existence.

Cheap Power and Light

Dnieprostroy, Russia, the scene of one of the hugest power units in the world, will produce electricity at the total cost of one-fifth of a cent per kilowatt hour, according to her engineers. Now, we hate to doubt the word of level-headed engineers, but even if they were one-fifth right, or even one-tenth right, and the electricity cost the people of Russia one cent or two cents per kilowatt hour, we would still think it was pretty cheap, compared with rates in this country, where we are under the benevolent dictatorship of a power trust.

When will people see the absurdity of letting private parties run public utilities, and charge exhorbitant prices for the "service?"

Minute Sermons

By Dr. Crawford Grays

Physically, alcohol in drinks, slows down all bodily processes and produces faint and pleasant drowsiness.

Mentally, such drinks work in much the same way.

Thus when under the influence of such imbibing there is usually a friendly and tolerant atitude.

But when one has work to attend to or face to face with temptation, that persons needs to be physically and mentally alert, likewise when driving a car. And yet a single glass of beer is enough to incommode and cripple alertness and resistance.

Liquor drinking produces a good feeling but it is not the glow of alert enthusiasm nor the feeling of true happiness. It is a dreamy, lazy, silly glow.

Taking any kind of alcoholic drink blights one's smartness, personality, efficiency, sanity, usefulness and self-control.

Don't become a liquor neophyte then you won't become a dithyramb for dithyrambs lose both job and character.

The Presiden's Message

Senator LaFollette perhaps best expressed the views of Progressive members of Congress, in regard to the President's mesage, when he expressed gratification over the general tone of the message and the objectives it outlined, but withheld any judgement of the legislative program until further messages revealed more specifically what it would include. President Roosevelt of course followed that plan in the last Congress. His opening message would cover a survey of conditions and discuss the "state of the nation" but specific legislative recommendations would come in later, one after another and carefully spaced so that each would have attention. As one writer pointed out, this strategy avoided the necessity for making the annual message an all-inclusive document, subsequently forgotten when Congress got down to the grind of its legislative puties.

Because of this fact there may be no significance in the absence of any reference to the re-organization of the banking structure, and of the establishment of a government operated institution which would exercise central control over the nation's credit and currency, or to the other missions that might be sent out there. Certainly he has set himself squarely on record against the American Liberty League and Chamber of Commerce elements which have been used to dominate the governmental picture

Democrats Clamp On the Gag

The overwhelming Democratic majority of the 74th Congress (Which is made up of 322 Democrats, 102 Republicans, 7 Wisconsin Progressives and three Minnesota Farmer-Laborites) asserted its power on the opening day of the session, rolling up a vote of 244 to 169 for the same "gag" rule which met defeat at the hands of the 73rd Congress. The new rule provides that in order to bring a bill out of committee when the committee makes no report, 218 Congressmen must sign a petition for that purpose. Formerly only 145 signatures were necessary. Opposed to the "gag" rule were Minnesota's Congressmen: Anderson, Christianson, Buckler, Kvale, Pittenger and Maas. Minnesota's lone Democrat, Elmer J. Ryan, vot-voted for the "gag."

It was under the 145 rule that the Frazier-Lemke Farm Re-financing Bill was almost put to a vote, and that the Soldiers' Adjusted Service Certificates Bill was taken out of the Committee and passed by an overwhelming majority during the last session.

Bonus Bill Passage Indicated

If the Washington Times poll is correct, the new "gag" rule will not stop the Adjusted Service Certificates Bill in spite of Presidential opposition. Rumors have it that the Patman Bill is approved by a majority of the Ways and Means Committee, and will be passed at an early date. The overwhelming majority which the last Congress passed the bill and the Lundeen motion to bring the bill of Committee, as well as definite stand of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other veterans' organizations for the bill, account in a large measure for the favorable indications of its passage.

Lundeens Social Insurance Bills

In slightly amended form, the Lundeen Unemployed, Old Age and Social Insurance Bill was reintroduced on the 3rd day of January with six other Lundeen bills, including two duplicates of the repeal of the Economy Act and for the placing of Spanish War Veterans on the same basis as the Civil War veterans.

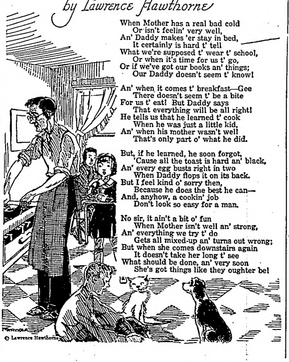
When Mother Stays in Bed

by Lawrence Hawthorne



When Mother has a real bad cold
  Or isn't feelin' very well,
An' Daddy makes 'er stay in bed,
  It certainly is hard t' tell
What we're supposed t' wear t' school,
  Or when it's time for us t' go,
Or if we've got our books an' things;
  Our Daddy doesn't seem t' know!

An' when it comes t' breakfast—Gee
  There doesn't seem t' be a bite
For us t' eat! But Daddy says
  That everything will be all right!
He tells us that he learned t' cook
  When he was just a little kid,
An' when his mother wasn't well
  That's only part o' what he did.

But, if he learned, he soon forgot,
  'Cause all the toast is hard an' black,
An' every egg busts right in two
  When Daddy flops it on its back.
But I feel kind o' sorry then,
  Because he does the best he can—
And, anyhow, a cookin' job
  Don't look so easy for a man.

No sir, it ain't a bit o' fun
  When Mother isn't well an' strong,
An' everything we try t' do
  Gets all mixed-up an' turns out wrong;
But when she comes downstairs again
  It doesn't take her long t' see
What should be done, an' very soon
  She's got things like they oughter be!

STOPPING ROAD CONSTRUCTION

Highway News

Praising two legislators who have proclaimed themselves against restoration of the 1932 motor vehicle license fee, a Minnesota paper says editorially: "The building of new roads can wait, so the tax should be left right where it is." In the same issue the same paper says "One of the hopes of most—citizens is that city and state officials will succeed in bringing about the construction of the viaduct (a $250,000 state highway project) before the year is far spent. This structure would absorb many of our unemployed and give them good, honest work for several months."

Persons who fight against highway revenues and yet demand expensive road improvements in their own communities provide somewhat of a puzzle for highway officials.

DOWN TO FUNDAMENTALS

Minnesota Leader

Moratoriums and Relief, "holidays," doles and other patches can NEVER solve the economic problem.

The people produce with hand and with brain. In return they receive in wages or income an amount of money less than the value of what they produce. So they can buy back only part of what they create. The difference, the surplus which they cannot buy, piles up, gluts markets and produces so-called "over production." That's as clear as A, B, C.

If the producers—producers in overalls and producers in white collars—were paid the full money value of their produce they could and would buy back as much as they create. But that would leave no profit which is now appropriated by wealthy non-producing parasites. Which is why Capitalism and its hirelings of press and legislative halls oppose a change in the system.

So, let's get this straight: Unless and until the producer receives the full social value of his product —the product of his brain or the product of his hands—there will be recurring panics, depressions, unemployment, breadlines and destitution. "The system has failed" and the fruits of the system will continue until Capitalism is replaced with a Cooperative Commonwealth. A tremennous step in that direction will be for the people publicly to own and operate the monopolized industries. That is the Farmer-Labor program.

THE GOVERNOR POINTS THE WAY

Minneapolis Star

Re-election didn't cause Governor Olson to forget the platform on which he campaigned, as so often happens to successful candidates.

His message to the new legislature contained the Farmer-Labor platform, rewritten to suit the time and place but without material change as a statement of objectives.

It was largely a matter of going on record, so far as the Governor was concerned, because the legislature is organized in opposition to him and his party.

The governor did not pupssyfoot as to what he believes should be done but he did invite the legislature to get together with him on as much common ground as they can find and do the things that they can agree on as necessary and advisable.

It is beyond the range of probabilities that the governor and the majority of the legislature will work in harmony throughout the session but if they will both adopt the attitude of his address and avoid stalemates on vital problems that demand action the state will be gainer.

The governor's address clearly points the way to accomplishment in this session in spite of the sharp differences of opinion between him and the legislative majority. If they will concentrate their attention on matters on which they can find points of agreement instead of on the policies on which they cannot agree the session can be made one of accomplishment.

JOBS, NOT CHARITY

Askov American

Minnesota, in common with the rest of the country, may look forward hopefully this year to a better management of the problem of relief.

President Roosevelt has demanded that the unemployed be given work, not doles. He has demanded that direct relief be eliminated wherever possible and that it be replaced by a vast program of useful public works which will be given wages, rather that doles to those unable to find employment in private industry. In recomending this action in his message to the new Congress, the president took a direct slap at the big business interests, who demanded the abolition of work relief in favor of a straight dole.

A public works program such as that contemplated by the president could do much in Minnesota. Among the constructive projects that immediately suggest themselves are elimination of grade crossings to reduce highway hazards, water conservation projects, reforestration, highway building and others. These works, in addition to providing jobs for the unemployed of the cities and the farmers who, because of drouth or the unfavorable economic conditions, are unable to make a living on their farms, would give lasting benefits to the state.

Surely such a program will meet with far greater favor among the people than one which reduces to pauperism those unable to find gainful private employment.

Prof. Roy G. Blakey of the University of Minnesota, economist and tax expert, whose studies of the Minnesota tax system has made him an authority in this field, estimates that the yield of the proposed dollar turnover tax, so popular in southern Minnesota, will not be more than $16,000,000. As Minnesota's tax requirement for all purposes, local, school, county, and state, are considerably over $100,000,000, the proposed tax will not make it poossible to eliminate all other taxes as has been suggested. Prof. Blakey holds that the turnover tax would not only be a disappointment as far as revenue is concerned, but that it would "fall more heavily upon the poor than upon the rich." He believes that the tax relief sought for property should come through larger income taxes and increases in inheritance and other special taxes. The sales tax should be used as a supplementary tax, if used at all, he believes.—The Northfield Independent

TWELVE NAMES SUBMITTED AT C. & C. MEETING

C. C. Committee to Aid City To Work Out New Electric Rate

Mr. Morris Bye, chairman of the nominating committee of the Civic and Commerce Association submitted the names of twelve nominees for six directors' posts to be filled this coming Thursday, January 24, in the annual election.

A committee including Frank Rinkle, W. L. Carlisle and W. H. Mann was appointed to lend aid to the city in working out a new schedule of rates for electric current. This committee acted upon an invitation extended by the council to the association.

At a conference held the evening before with Davidson Engineer A. O. Torgerson of the state highway department the association had been informed of the probable proposed parkway plans of Jonnson st. from the east end of the new bridge would be enlarged so as to extend around the curve so as to extend as far south as Bridge st. It is said that bids may be called for in February or in March.

The highway department had made a request for sufficient funds in order that it could qualify for $7,000,000 in federal allotments for the construction of roads, to this request the association offered to lend its support. The matter concerning the extension of the trunk highway between Grygla to highway No. 1 was referred to the road committee for a report.

Birthday Greeting to Be Sent to President

"Happy birthday Mr. President I am proud to know that the cost of sending this greeting will help in the great fight against infantile paralysis, to which you have given your leadership and loaned your birthday." Will be the birthday greeting sent to the President. The Western Union has placed its nation wide system of telegraph offices at the disposal of the presidents birthday ball committee for receiving 25 cents from each person who places his signature on a multiple signature Birthday Greeting.

Signatures from every city town and hamlet will be mailed to New York where they will be bound into what will probably be the greatest birthday greetng in history. One hundred per cent of the money will be turned over to the National Birthday Ball Committee which will arrange for proper credit for each community.

DANGER IN TOO-SCRIMPY RATIONS FOR LIVESTOCK

—o—

[illegible] ultimate failure [illegible] for farmers who persist [illegible] to carry their livestock [illegible] maintenance rations, [illegible] a special advisory com[illegible] feeding. The committee's [illegible] the feed situation and [illegible] of feeding in the drouth [illegible] indicates that many farmers are skimping their live[illegible] too much.

Farmers who felt they had [illegible] finding that it will be [illegible] with limited rations per head that they will be able to have [illegible] last until Hay season May 5 in southern Minnesota and [illegible] 15 Northern Minnesota. Where [illegible] feed will be needed and is not available some animals should be sent to the market without delay.

It is difficult to indicate a minimum feed requirement as there are so many different types of livestock and so many different types of feed being used. If feed has not to be purchased at most Minnesota Points (January 1) the cost will range from 12 to 16 cents per day per 1000 pounds live weight of animals. However how much grain will be needed to feed the ainmals will depend on the age and condition of the animals. The young, the old, and the thin animals will require the larger amounts.

Instead of using grain coarse roughages may be satisfactorily suppplemented by feeding 1 to 1½ pounds per 1,000 pounds live weight. High protein are linseed meal, cotton seed meal, corn gluten meal, cotton seed meal, corn gluten meal or dry tankage.

Moorhead Banco Trial Opens After Holidays

Following a holiday recess, the trial of J. Cameron Thomson, president of the Northwest Bancorporation, was resumed at Moorhead last week before Judge James E. Montague. Thomson along with a number of other officers and directors of the Bancorporation, is alleged to have thousands of Minnesota people through the sale of the corporation's stock, paprticularly one resident of Clay county who brought the action, which accounts for the trial being conducted at Moorhead, the county seat. The trial is a colorful affair. Before 12 Clay county farmers, business men, and citizens, the transactions and operations of a gigantic banking chain are being revealed; 15 defense lawyers are on hand to challenge points of law. In this respect they are giving the presiding judge plenty of opportunities to render decisions. On the other hand, the state is also well represented—county attorneys, assistant attorney generals, speecial prosecutors, auditors, investigators and what not. In addition 6 operators of an international detective agency mingle with the crowd, to say nothing of the press, which is represented from points east, south, and west.

Tinware

The word "tin," when descriptive of cans, inexpensive kitchen utensils, toys and similar articles, is a misnomer, declares G. R. Turner in the Kansas City Times. Strictly speaking, all tinware consists of things made of tin-plate, thin sheets of iron, or steel coated with pure tin to prevent rusting. This process, known as "tinning," involves dipping the sheet-iron or steel in a bath of molten tin. Tin itself is a white, lustrous, highly malleable and ductile metal, too pliant to be of value as the sole metal in articles that require much handling or hard usage.

Mr. Morris Bye, chairman of the nominating committee of the Civic and Commerce Association submitted the names of twelve nominees for six directors' posts to be filled this coming Thursday, January 24, at the annual election.

The matter concerning the extension of the trunk highway between Grygla to highway No. 1 was referred to the road committee for a report.

Types of Duststorms

The weather bureau describes three outstanding types of duststorms. The first is the whirlwind type. The whirling motion of the wind takes up surface dust and carries it high into the air. Such storms are of local incidence and brief duration. The second is called the shift-wind type. This occurs when opposing air currents produce a commotion which lifts the dust and this also is local. The third is the straight-wind type. In this storm the wind blows steadily in one direction and the duststorm thus created is likely to prove of longer duration.

Only Five "Precious" Stones

Only five stones are recognized as "precious." They are the diamond, ruby, sapphire, emerald and precious opal. Pearls being of organic origin are not stones, although they are usually considered among the precious stones because of their beauty and rarity.

Active Volcanoes in West

Mt. Lassen is sometimes called the only active volcano in the continental United States, but a volcano specialist says that Mt. Shasta, Mt. Baker, and several other peaks in the Northwest are active volcanoes which may erupt at any time.

HAMILTON'S

GOV. OLSON PUTS PROGRAM UP TO THE LAWMAKERS

Remarking that all three major parties in the state advocated such action in the last campaign, Governor Olson asked that the laws be changed so that legislators would be elected onthe partybasis,instead of without party labels as at present.

Tax Fight in Prospect

Warnings of the coming battle over avruois efforts for tax reform already are evident.

One of the most startling proposals yet submitted to this session is the bill presented by Senator George H. Sullivan of Stillwater, one of the conservative leaders, which would remove all taxes from real estate and personal property for state purpopse. Such a law would make necessary the changes of rates in other present tax laws or adoption of a new tax system to replace the revenues thus lost.

Statements by Senator Sullivan after the introduction of his bill indication that he was presenting it princippally for the purpose of starting off the battle over tax reform, When Senator Sullivan was asked what he planned as a companion measure to provide revenues to replace those which would be taken away by his bill he replied: "We will have all winter to argue that." He explained: "It is just a method of bringing this whole tax subject to the surface, and this will give us a head on this pressing problem."

Four bills asking continuation of the reduced motor vehicle license fee were introduced in the Legislature in the first week. The 1933 session of the Legislature made emergency reductions of the license fees for the biennium. New legislation must now be passed to keep the fees from rising to the old levels.

It has been pointed out by N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner, that unless the revenues of the highway department are raised the state will be unable to obtain approximately $7,000,000 in federal aid road funds in the next two years The national government has given notice that it will cease giving emergency highway aid to states and will revert to the former procedure under which the states must match federal aid roads funds dollar for dollar. Because of the reduction of auto license fees by the 1933 Legislature at the same time that extended the trunk highways 4,400 miles, the highway department funds have become depleted to the point where the state can no longer match federal funds unless new revenue is provided.

For Graduated Auto Fees

In discussions of ways to increase the highway fund revenues much sentiment is apparent for the increasing of license fees on the higher priced cars. It is felt that a person able to buy a higher priced car is much better able to affoord the higher tax than the owner of a lower-priced car. Even so, such increased rates as have bee: suggested would represent only a very small fraction of the annual maintenance of such larger cars.

Governor Olson in his message pointed out that "Minnesota ranks near the bottom among the states in the amount of taxes paid by the average motorist."

Among the legislative actions in recognition of the need for farm relief was the passage of the joint resolution presented by Senator Lawson memorializing Congress to hasten action for seed relief to destitute farmers of Minnesota and to take immediate action for liberalizing regulations governing the distribution of forage and relief.

14,000 TO GET JOBS IF STATE MATCHES U. S. HIGHWAY AID FUND

Jobs for approximately 14,000 men will be provided on Minnesota highways if the state matches federal aid offered for this year and [illegible], according to N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner.

"If revenues of the highway department are restored to the 19[illegible]," said Commissioner Elsberg, "Minnesota will be able to obtain nearly $7,000,000 offered us by the federal government for road construction and unemployment relief.

"That would mean jobs for 14,000 or more Minnesota working men, and the circulation of $14,000,000 in Minnesota business and trade channels. If Minnesota does not match the federal aid, the 14,000 men will have to be provided for by relief or other expenditures.

"The charge has been made that political favoritism will be shown by the highway department in employing men under such a construction prpogram. This is entirely unfounded. On all projects financed with federal highway funds, the hiring of men is in the hands of the National Re-employment Service, a federal agency over which the state has no control.

"Members of the legislature will search a long time before they can find a better bargain for the taxpayers than this opportunity to get two dollars worth of road construction and employment for every dollar advanced by the state."

NAZI FACE NEW CONFLICTS WITHIN THEIR PARTY RANKS

Washington, D. C. (TIS)—The proposed American cotton barter deal with Germany appears to have met with unexpected obstacles despite the efforts of the Hitler government to effect a speedy conclusion of the long protracted negotiations. While informed circles indicate that only a few minor technicalities are lacking, others equally well informed maintain that the treasury department is unwilling to approve the transaction. Southern industrial interests are bringing strong pressure upon the federal authorities to approve the deal which is described as vital to the interests of the American cotton growers.

The plan provides for the sale of 500,000 to 800,000 bales to Germany. In return for it, the United States is to accept German goods to the value of the transaction estimated at approximately $30,000,000; It is said that nitrates which Germany receives from Chile will be among these barter goods. American packing concerns have also participated in these negotiations but it is extremely doubtful whether American meat products will be included in the barter agreement.

Among the sponsors of the plan which will break the boycott ring around Germany, are the U. S. Senators Pat Harrison of Missippi and John Banghead of Alabama. Both have repeatedly appealed to the treasury and state departments in an effort to bring about the conclusion of the deal. Those in favor of the barter agreement point to the drop in American cotton sales in Germany. While German purchases from August 1st, to December 1st, 1933 amounted to 685,000 bales, the figure has shrunk to 200,000 bales for the corresponding period in 1934.

Rochester Park Project Employs Several Hundred

Outstanding physical changes in the landscape of the Silver lake area in northeast Rochester are being brought about by 450 men on the work relief payroll of the Minnesota SERA.

It represents one of the largest single undertakings of its kind in the state. The laborers will continue to be employed until April first on grading of driveways and similar improvement work.

Plans for future programs include the construction of a new dam in the Zumbro river to create an artificial lake.

Long Prairie River Plan For Diversion Is Studied

A crew of eight surveyors from the works division of the Minnesota SERA has examined the topography of the southwestern part of Todd county to determine the feasibility of diverting part of the water from the Long Prairie river into Lake Osakis.

The findings of the survey will be awaited with interest by many, who have long deplored the falling level of one of the most beautiful bodies of water in the county.

If a dam were to be constructed in the river at a suitable point, a considerable expanse of low lands in the vicinity would have to be flooded necessitating the construction of bridges for township and county road crossings.

World's Highest Golf Course

So rarefied is the atmosphere at the world's highest golf course in Cloudcroft, N. M. (alt. 9,500 feet), that the air will not sustain a golf ball in flight for the nominal distance, and a 175 to 180-yard drive is considered good distance.

Commission Plans Much Emergency Forest Work

Anticipating the extension of Emergency Conservation work by Congress, beyond April 1, the Minnesota Conservation Commission submitted plans and proposals for 30 state forestry camps recently.

Twenty-one such camps are now in operation in state forests and in drouth relief counties. Additional camps proposed by the commission are recommended for new forest areas or additions to existing state forests.

"Since the majority of Emergency Conservation work must be done on publicly owned or publicly controlled lands, the continuance of this work in Minnesota forests will rest largely on the acquisition or control of additional tracts in state forests," E. V. Willard, Conservation Commissioner said. Ten new forests have been proposed with recommendations to be presented to the state legislature now in session.

Emergency Conservation work, according to Grover Conzet, state forester, can be divided into two general classes, protection of existing forests and restoration of forests which have been unwisely destroyed or depleted.

The first consists of removing fire hazards, cleaning up slash and natural debris and the construction of protective measures such as trails, telephone lines, firebreaks and buildings. The second consists of planting, cultural work and other general improvements.

It is desired that ultimately management of public areas for protection, production of timber, opportunities for recreation, increase of wild life and the conservation of water resources will result, the Commission states.

Magyar Courtships

Magyars never tire of love making, and courtships often last for years. But when it comes to the actual proposal and arrangements for marriage, that is all left to a go-between. The suitor sends a proxy, a woman friend usually, to begin his wooing by making inquiry as to whether his suit would be welcome. If he is encouraged to do so, he promptly calls in person, but accompanied by a friend dressed in holiday attire, who in eloquent and poetic phrases showers compliments upon the girl and her family and praises the suitor.

Crops and Soil Problems To Be Discussed at Show

Crops and Soils problems will be featured in the discussions scheduled for the second day of Winter Shows week, Tuesday, Febuary 5. One of the principal addresses will be delivered by Dr. O. B. Jesness, Chief of the Department of Agricultural Economics, University Farm, who will discuss "Agriculture and the Export Market." Dr. Jesness is one of our leading national authorities on this problem and will havea message that will be of interest to producers throughout the Northwest.

R. C. Rose, extension plant pathologist, University Farm, will present a lecture demonstration on "Control of Cerial Smut." This disease has caused serious losses throughout the Valley counties and a spepcial effort is being made this year to induce elevator operators to install necessary equipment for grain treatment.

A. G. Tolaas, in charge of seed potato certification in Minnesota, will discuss "The future for registered and Certified Potatoes." The special potato meetings will include "The outlook for potatoes in 1935" by T. M. McCall, Northwest School horticulturist, and "Reducing Field Injury to Potatoes" by Halvor Torkelson, Erskine.

Members of the Crops and Soils association will hold their annual dinner meeting at noon. Herman Skyberg, Fisher, is president of the Red River Valley Corps and Soils association.

Conservation Studies in Public Schools is Urged

Introduction of conservation studies in the public schools as part of the regular public school curriculum was urged upon the state Deppartment of Education by the Conservation Commission at its meeting held last week.

"The future welfare of our state," a resolution introduced by Judge William M. Erickson, a member of the commission, says, "as pertaining to our natural resources is absolutely dependent upon the grasp and understanding of conservation problems by the coming generation. A study of these problems will not only make our youth conservation-minded but will give them a fund of knowledge to aid them in their daily life."

As the result of a conference recently held by the State Commissioner of Education and the Conservation Commissioner, conservation studies have been included as one of the supplementary studies prepared by the Commissioner of Education. The Department of Conservation has assigned William Munch of the Division of Game and Fish to appear before school groups to lecture on wild life problems.

PREPARE FOR RAIDS!

RAIDS on the larder, we mean, because this is the season to expect them in great numbers and it will be "just too bad" for mother's popularity with the family if a party can't be fixed up instanter. One of the joys of being at home is a pantry supplied with eats and drinks to be had any time. With the juniors coming home from school and college and lots of informal entertaining just ahead, the pantry shelves must be well fortified.

This winter things are a bit different from what they have been for thirteen long years, because real beer, approved legally and medically, has come back into good society and the new crop of larder guardians that has grown up since the old days has a few things to learn about what to serve with the 3.2 beverage. Some of the older ones may have forgotten, too.

Most of the things that we are used to serving with tea and hot chocolate do not seem quite husky enough to go with beer, and besides, there are certain traditions that we might just as well observe.

A Simple Matter

It is really a very simple matter to whisk together something for the raiders, because practically all of the necessary "ammunition" that you need to meet them with comes in cans, of assorted shapes and sizes.

The one absolutely necessary accompaniment of beer, from time immemorial, can now be bought in cans. We refer to pretzels, or "bretzels" (if you insist on being absolutely accurate in your spelling), and there are lots and lots of other crackers that are just as acceptable and that are put up in tins, so that they will keep fresh and snappy right down to the least crumb,—cheese crackers, saltines, butter thins and seemingly dozens of others, just so that they are not too sweet. Add a touch of your favorite sandwich spread and there you are with a delicious snack.

Sandwiches Galore

"A sandwich and a glass of beer" has come back as an adult demand for something really good and satisfying, in the home as well as in the restaurant, and the modern sandwich spread, in its various forms, makes up into delicious sandwiches, with your favorite bread.

If you want regular meat sandwiches, on rye bread, which seem to go particularly well with beer, there are all kinds of canned meats, of excellent flavor and quality that can be slipped out of their containers easily and sliced up so neatly. Ham loaf, veal loaf and corned beef all come in tins that can be kept in your refrigerator or on the pantry shelf, not overlooking boneless chicken, salmon, tuna fish and Vienna sausage. Most of these call for a "sharpener" in the form of some sort of pickle, like dill or minced sweet, just to give an added tang and zest.

Vienna sausages with India relish or chopped sweet pickle and mayonnaise will appeal to the men of the family, with their beer. Cut the sausages in thin rings and put a layer of them on bread covered with butter and mayonnaise, and sprinkle the India relish on top.

Some Like It Hot

For a real lunch, when you want to serve something hot and still keep within good beer circles so to speak, there is an interesting variety of good things in cans that may be heated up quickly, such as beef stew, Hungarian goulash, frankfurters and sauerkraut or pigs' knuckles and sauerkraut. Just writing about them makes one hungry, and if reading has the same effect on you, here is a recipe that you might like to follow out for the family today.

Sauerkraut Sausages and Apples: Heat the contents of one 1-pound can of sauerkraut and pile in the center of a large hot platter. Fry one pound of sausages (or the contents of a 9-ounce can of Vienna sausages) and arrange on top of the kraut. Around the edges place the apples. They are prepared by coring and paring six small apples and cooking them in a syrup made by boiling one cup sugar and one and one-half cups of water and a few red cinnamon candies together. Turn the apples around often so that they cook and color evenly on all sides. Let them cook tender, but not so long that they lose their shape. This serves six persons.

And here is another sandwich that goes well for an after-the-movie snack, that is quickly made up and gets a hearty welcome from everyone who likes cheese.

Toasted Deviled Cheese Sandwich: Spread squares or oblongs of buttered toast with deviled ham. Sprinkle thickly with grated cheese and place under broiler flame until cheese is melted and brown. Serve at once.

And remember that beer is at its best at a temperature of 40° F.*

Nickname of "Bomba" Was Given to Ferdinand II

Ferdinand II, by the grace of God, king of the two Sicilies, Jerusalem etc., duke of Parma, Piacenza, etc., Hereditary, etc., etc., for all of his resounding titles was one of the most thoroughly hated of the petty kings and princes who ruled the various independent states which were joined together in the early '60s to form the present kingdom of Italy, writes R. A. Barry, in the New York Herald Tribune.

The two Sicilies, the island of that name and the neighboring southern portion of the Italian mainland with Naples as its capital had existed as a dual kingdom from the days of the Crusades, subject at different times to Norman, Austrian or Spanish dominion. The kingdom had, after the Napoleonic wars, been reassigned to the younger branch of the Spanish Bourbons, and it was under the misrule of these reactionaries that the Sicilies passed their final years as a separate kingdom.

Once, in 1847, a rebellion broke out on the Island of Sicily, and for a time appeared to be succeeding, for Ferdinand granted a constitution, but he soon regained the upper hand, and by wholesale treason trials soon had every important citizen who had any part in the rebellion either in exile or in jail.

During the rebellion, he had vindictively ordered the bombardment of the defenseless cities of Messina and Palermo, which act earned him the derisive nickname "Bomba" and, although his stern and repressive measures had thoroughly quelled the spirit of revolt and instilled a feeling akin to terror in the people, he could not recall the name and under it he was loathed and hated to the end of his reign.

It Has Been Proved Fish Are Really "Stone Deaf"

We use the expression "blind as a bat," without warrant, but "deaf as a fish" would be in order, since it is practically proved that fishes are "stone deaf." Hearing is so often associated with seeing that, when fishes are startled, it is usually impossible to be sure whether it was the sight of something, or the sound that affected them. The splash of a stone in the water frightens them, but is the fright caused by the sight of a solid object, by the noise of its fall, or by the commotion it causes?

To test the effect of sound on fishes experiments have been conducted in a large aquarium occupied by a variety of species. A protected electric bell was placed in the glass-sided tank, and sounded repeatedly without any visible effect on the fishes whatever. To determine whether a high-pitched and shrill sound would disturb them a whistle of penetrating note was introduced. None of the fishes took the slightest notice, showing neither fear nor curiosity.

Should Be Easy Fight

An Eskimo seldom, if ever, fights, although he can, if driven. He usually punishes his enemy with ridicule and by making faces. The one making the worst face wins the argument.

14,000 TO GET JOBS IF STATE MATCHES U. S. HIGHWAY AID FUND

Jobs for approximately 14,000 men will be provided on Minnesota highways if the state matches federal aid offered for this year and next, according to N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner.

"If revenues of the highway department are restored to the 19[illegible]," said Commissioner Elsberg, "Minnesota will be able to obtain nearly $7,000,000 offered us by the federal government for road construction and unemployment relief.

"That would mean jobs for 14,000 or more Minnesota working men, and the circulation of $14,000,000 in Minnesota business and grade channels. If Minnesota does not match the federal aid, the 14,000 men will have to be provided for by relief or other expenditures.

"The charge has been made that political favoritism will be shown by the highway department in employing men under such a construction prpogram. This is entirely unfounded. On all projects financed with federal highway funds, the hiring of men is in the hands of the National Re-employment Service, a federal agency over which the state has no control.

"Members of the legislature will search a long time before they can find a better bargain for the taxpayers than this opportunity to get two dollars worth of road construction and employment for every dollar advanced by the state."

NAZI FACE NEW CONFLICTS WITHIN THEIR PARTY RANKS

Washington, D. Ç. (TIS)—The proposed American cotton barter deal with Germany appears to have met with unexpected obstacles despite the efforts of the Hitler government to effect a speedy conclusion of the long protracted negotiations. While informed circles indicate that only a few minor technicalities are lacking, others equally well informed maintain that the treasury department is unwilling to approve the transaction. Southern industrial interests are bringing strong pressure upon the federal authorities to approve the deal which is described as vital to the interests of the American cotton growers.

The plan provides for the sale of 500,000 to 800,000 bales to Germany. In return for it, the United States is to accept German goods to the value of the transaction estimated at approximately $30,000,000. It is said that nitrates which Germany receives from Chile will be among these barter goods. American packing concerns have also participated in these negotiations but it is extremely doubtful whether American meat products will be included in the barter agreement.

Among the sponsors of the plan which will break the boycott ring around Germany, are the U. S. Senators Pat Harrison of Missippi and John Banghead of Alabama. Both have repeatedly appealed to the treasury and state departments in an effort to bring about the conclusion of the deal. Those in favor of the barter agreement point to the drop in American cotton sales in Germany. While German purchases from August 1st, to December 1st, 1933 amounted to 635,000 bales, the figure has shrunk to 200,000 bales for the corresponding period in 1934.

Rochester Park Project Employs Several Hundred

Outstanding physical changes in the landscape of the Silver lake area in northeast Rochester are being brought about by 450 men on the work relief payroll of the Minnesota SERA.

It represents one of the largest single undertakings of its kind in the state. The laborers will continue to be employed until April first on grading of driveways and similar improvement work.

Plans for future programs include the construction of a new dam in the Zumbro river to create an artificial lake.

Long Prairie River Plan For Diversion Is Studied

A crew of eight surveyors from the works division of the Minnesota SERA has examined the topography of the southwestern part of Todd county to determine the feasibility of diverting part of the water from the Long Prairie river into Lake Osakis.

The findings of the survey will be awaited with interest by many, who have long deplored the falling level of one of the most beautiful bodies of water in the county.

If a dam were to be constructed in the river at a suitable point, a considerable expanse of low lands in the vicinity would have to be flooded necessitating the construction of bridges for township and county road crossings.

World's Highest Golf Course

So rarefied is the atmosphere at the world's highest golf course in, Cloudcroft, N. M. (alt. 9,500 feet), that the air will not sustain a golf ball in flight for the nominal distance, and a 175 to 180-yard drive is considered good distance.

Commission Plans Much Emergency Forest Work

Anticipating the extension of Emergency Conservation work by Congress, beyond April 1, the Minnesota Conservation Commission submitted plans and proposals for 30 state forestry camps recently.

Twenty-one such camps are now in operation in state forests and in drouth relief counties. Additional camps proposed by the commission are recommended for new forest areas or additions to existing state forests.

"Since the majority of Emergency Conservation work must be done on publicly owned or publicly controlled lands, the continuance of this work in Minnesota forests will rest largely on the acquisition or control of additional tracts in state forests," E. V. Willard, Conservation Commissioner said. Ten new forests have been proposed with recommendations to be presented to the state legislature now in session.

Emergency Conservation work, according to Grover Conzet, state forester, can be divided into two general classes, protection of existing forests and restoration of forests which have been unwisely destroyed or depleted.

The first consists of removing fire hazards, cleaning up slash and natural debris and the construction of protective measures such as trails, telephone lines, firebreaks and buildings. The second consists of planting, cultural work and other general improvements.

It is desired that ultimately management of public areas for protection, production of timber, opportunities for recreation, increase of wild life and the conservation of water resources will result, the Commission states.

Magyar Courtships

Magyars never tire of love making, and courtships often last for years. But when it comes to the actual proposal and arrangements for marriage, that is all left to a go-between. The suitor sends a proxy, a woman friend usually, to begin his wooing by making inquiry as to whether his suit would be welcome. If he is encouraged to do so, he promptly calls in person, but accompanied by a friend dressed in holiday attire, who in eloquent and poetic phrases showers compliments upon the girl and her family and praises the suitor.

Crops and Soil Problems To Be Discussed at Show

Crops and Soils problems will be featured in the discussions scheduled for the second day of Winter Shows week, Tuesday, Febuary 5. One of the principal addresses will be delivered by Dr. O. B. Jesness, Chief of the Department of Agricultural Economics, University Farm, who will discuss "Agriculture and the Export Market." Dr. Jesness is one of our leading national authorities on this problem and will havea message that will be of interest to producers throughout the Northwest.

R. C. Rose, extension plant pathologist, University Farm, will present a lecture demonstration on "Control of Cerial Smut." This disease has caused serious losses throughout the Valley counties and a spepcial effort is being made this year to induce elevator operators to install necessary equipment for grain treatment.

A. G. Tolaas, in charge of seed potato certification in Minnesota, will discuss "The future for registered and Certified Potatoes." The special potato meetings will include "The outlook for potatoes in 1935" by T. M. McCall, Northwest School horticulturist, and "Reducing Field Injury to Potatoes" by Halvor Torkelson, Erskine.

Members of the Crops and Soils association will hold their annual dinner meeting at noon. Herman Skyberg, Fisher, is president of the Red River Valley Corps and Soils association.

Conservation Studies in Public Schools is Urged

Introduction of conservation studies in the public schools as part of the regular public school curriculum was urged upon the state Deppartment of Education by the Conservation Commission at its meeting held last week.

"The future welfare of our state," a resolution introduced by Judge William M. Erickson, a member of the commission, says, "as pertaining to our natural resources is absolutely dependent upon the grasp and understanding of conservation problems by the coming generation. A study of these problems will not only make our youth conservation-minded but will give them a fund of knowledge to aid them in their daily life."

As the result of a conference recently held by the State Commissioner of Education and the Conservation Commissioner, conservation studies have been included as one of the supplementary studies prepared by the Commissioner of Education. The Department of Conservation has assigned William Munch of the Division of Game and Fish to appear before school groups to lecture on wild life problems.

Ship's China and Silver

PREPARE FOR RAIDS!

RAIDS on the larder, we mean, because this is the season to expect them in great numbers and it will be "just too bad" for mother's popularity with the family if a party can't be fixed up instanter. One of the joys of being at home is a pantry supplied with eats and drinks to be had any time. With the juniors coming home from school and college and lots of informal entertaining just ahead, the pantry shelves must be well fortified.

This winter things are a bit different from what they have been for thirteen long years, because real beer, approved legally and medically, has come back into good society and the new crop of larder guardians that has grown up since the old days has a few things to learn about what to serve with the 3.2 beverage. Some of the older ones may have forgotten, too.

Most of the things that we are used to serving with tea and hot chocolate do not seem quite husky enough to go with beer, and besides, there are certain traditions that we might just as well observe.

A Simple Matter

It is really a very simple matter to whisk together something for the raiders, because practically all of the necessary "ammunition" that you need to meet them with comes in cans, of assorted shapes and sizes.

The one absolutely necessary accompaniment of beer, from time immemorial, can now be bought in cans. We refer to pretzels, or "bretzels" (if you insist on being absolutely accurate in your spelling), and there are lots and lots of other crackers that are just as acceptable and that are put up in tins, so that they will keep fresh and snappy right down to the least crumb,—cheese crackers, saltines, butter thins and seemingly dozens of others, just so that they are not too sweet. Add a touch of your favorite sandwich spread and there you are with a delicious snack.

Sandwiches Galore

"A sandwich and a glass of beer" has come back as an adult demand for something really good and satisfying, in the home as well as in the restaurant, and the modern sandwich spread, in its various forms, makes up into delicious sandwiches, with your favorite bread.

If you want regular meat sandwiches, on rye bread, which seem to go particularly well with beer, there are all kinds of canned meats, of excellent flavor and quality that can be slipped out of their containers easily and sliced up so neatly. Ham loaf, veal loaf and corned beef all come in tins that can be kept in your refrigerator or on the pantry shelf, not overlooking boneless chicken, salmon, tuna fish and Vienna sausage. Most of these call for a "sharpener" in the form of some sort of pickle, like dill or minced sweet, just to give an added tang and zest.

Vienna sausages with India relish or chopped sweet pickle and mayonnaise will appeal to the men of the family, with their beer. Cut the sausages in thin rings and put a layer of them on bread covered with butter and mayonnaise, and sprinkle the India relish on top.

Some Like It Hot

For a real lunch, when you want to serve something hot and still keep within good beer circles so to speak, there is an interesting variety of good things in cans that may be heated up quickly, such as beef stew, Hungarian goulash, frankfurters and sauerkraut or pigs' knuckles and sauerkraut. Just writing about them makes one hungry, and if reading has the same effect on you, here is a recipe that you might like to follow out for the family today.

Sauerkraut Sausages and Apples: Heat the contents of one 1-pound can of sauerkraut and pile in the center of a large hot platter. Fry one pound of sausages (or the contents of a 9-ounce can of Vienna sausages) and arrange on top of the kraut. Around the edges place the apples. They are prepared by coring and paring six small apples and cooking them in a syrup made by boiling one cup sugar and one and one-half cups of water and a few red cinnamon candies together. Turn the apples around often so that they cook and color evenly on all sides. Let them cook tender, but not so long that they lose their shape. This serves six persons.

And here is another sandwich that goes well for an after-the-movie snack, that is quickly made up and gets a hearty welcome from everyone who likes cheese.

Toasted Deviled Cheese Sandwich: Spread squares or oblongs of buttered toast with deviled ham. Sprinkle thickly with grated cheese and place under broiler flame until cheese is melted and brown. Serve at once.

And remember that beer is at its best at a temperature of 40° F.*

Nickname of "Bomba" Was Given to Ferdinand II

Ferdinand II, by the grace of God, king of the two Sicilies, Jerusalem etc., duke of Parma, Piacenza, etc., Hereditary, etc., etc., for all of his resounding titles was one of the most thoroughly hated of the petty kings and princes who ruled the various independent states which were joined together in the early '60s to form the present kingdom of Italy, writes R. A. Barry, in the New York Herald Tribune.

The two Sicilies, the island of that name and the neighboring southern portion of the Italian mainland with Naples as its capital had existed as a dual kingdom from the days of the Crusades, subject at different times to Norman, Austrian or Spanish dominion. The kingdom had, after the Napoleonic wars, been reassigned to the younger branch of the Spanish Bourbons, and it was under the misrule of these reactionaries that the Sicilies passed their final years as a separate kingdom.

Once, in 1847, a rebellion broke out on the island of Sicily, and for a time appeared to be succeeding, for Ferdinand granted a constitution, but he soon regained the upper hand, and by wholesale treason trials soon had every important citizen who had any part in the rebellion either in exile or in jail.

During the rebellion, he had vindictively ordered the bombardment of the defenseless cities of Messina and Palermo, which act earned him the derisive nickname "Bomba" and, although his stern and repressive measures had thoroughly quelled the spirit of revolt and instilled a feeling akin to terror in the people, he could not recall the name and under it he was loathed and hated to the end of his reign.

It Has Been Proved Fish Are Really "Stone Deaf"

We use the expression "blind as a bat," without warrant, but "deaf as a fish" would be in order, since it is practically proved that fishes are "stone deaf." Hearing is so often associated with seeing that, when fishes are startled, it is usually impossible to be sure whether it was the sight of something, or the sound that affected them. The splash of a stone in the water frightens them, but is the fright caused by the sight of a solid object, by the noise of its fall, or by the commotion it causes?

To test the effect of sound on fishes experiments have been conducted in a large aquarium occupied by a variety of species. A protected electric bell was placed in the glass-sided tank, and sounded repeatedly without any visible effect on the fishes whatever. To determine whether a high-pitched and shrill sound would disturb them a whistle of penetrating note was introduced. None of the fishes took the slightest notice, showing neither fear nor curiosity.

Should Be Easy Fight

An Eskimo seldom, if ever, fights, although he can, if driven. He usually punishes his enemy with ridicule and by making faces. The one making the worst face wins the argument.

ALCOHOL PROPAGANDISTS MAKES CHANGE OF FRONT

By W. G. Calderwood

In the hearings of the Judiciary Committee of the U. S. Senate of the second session of the 65th Congress, the brewer, Mr. Feigenspan of New York, was on the stand and Senator Overman asked him if it was the custom of the brewers to pay authors to write articles favorable to the liquor interests and get them published in magazines and newspapers because of the standing of the writers. Mr. Feigenspan answered, "I believe that is true."

It seems likely that something of the same general plan is being followed now in the field of medicine. A book, recently off the press, lauds alcohol as a stimulant that cannot be surpassed in certain prevalent chronic diseases.

In answering an inquiry submitted to him by Cora Frances Stoddard, chief executive officer of the Scientific Temperance Federation, Dr. William J. Mayo, the world-famed physician and surgeon of the Mayo Clinic said.

> "Scientific research has shown that alcohol is a narcotic, not a stimulant. Alcohol has little value as a medicinal agent and certainly carries dangers to those who make use of it as a drink."

Dr. Richard C. Cabot, of Harvard Medical School, states that the claims made in the book are at [illegible] the times. "[illegible] research," says Dr. Cabot [illegible] long ago that alcohol [illegible] the heart under any conditions." The British Alcohol Investigating Committee, in a discussion of alcohol and the heart, states:

> [illegible] popular idea that alcohol is a stimulant proves, on examination, to be scientifically untenable. The supposition has no basis in ascertained fact,"

[illegible] book is probably a part of a systematic campaign of propaganda. Medical men have recently been quoted in newspapers comparing the food value in a highball or glass of beer with a plate of ham and eggs, or a given portion of other foods. Even those who enjoy no distinction in the medical or scientific world can probably find market for anything that they can get printed extolling the medicinal or dietetic value of alcohol.

Let Our Motto Be

GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD
Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

SCHOOL LIFE A HEALTH ADVENTURE

SCHOOL in the minds of children and parents of children is a health adventure for all. During the summer, children are usually in a good state of health. They spend most of the time out of doors and so store up sunshine. Outside of a few digestive disturbances, caused by sunburn or bad water on some camping trip or overeating of picnic food, they have been quite generally free of ailments since early last spring.

Now how will they stand the fall and winter, housed as they will be for hours a day with some forty other children coming from as many different family environments? Will they be exposed to some disease, such as diphtheria, scarlet fever, whooping cough, or measles? Will there be an epidemic of colds? Will some child in the room show signs of tuberculosis, making you uneasy for the health of your own?

Particularly is school a health adventure for the child of five or six years who is entering for the first time this new life of education, and who has never before been in close contact with other individuals than his own family group and his neighboring playmates. It is a critical time for this little John or little Mary. Every one gets accustomed to the invisible bacteria in one's own home. When a child starts school, he or she has an established community of bacterial life in the covering layers of the nose and throat that is much like the bacterial life in the covering layers of the nose and throat of the other members of the family. Now he enters another germ world completely. Each child transfers the germs from his own body through hands, pencils, coughing, sneezing, loud talking and shouting, to the nose and throat of other children. The school and recreation places become clearing houses for the exchange or the bacterial flora of the upper respiratory passages.

If your child has had tonsilitis, adenoids, or chronic sore throat, he or she will carefully collect, preserve and grow all the newly acquired germs from the forty or more other children. If your child, on the other hand, has a nose and throat that are perfectly normal, these organs will function so as to tend to destroy most of the new invisible visitors. As a result there will very soon be established a different kind of bacterial flora in the nose and throat which is harmless to the child. Your physician can determine whether your child's nose and throat are normal. Abnormal and diseased tonsils and adenoids should be corrected before a child starts school.

Diphtheria can be prevented by vaccination. You should have your child immunized or vaccinated against diphtheria for the following reasons: First, to prevent an illness that terminates fatally about once among every ten or twelve cases of the disease. Diphtheria is a very serious ailment, one of the most serious a child encounters. Diphtheria is avoidable and it is useless to subject your child to this hazard. Second, you should want to protect the other children in the school against getting diphtheria from your child. During the period of sore throat before the acute croup or diphtheria develops, a child spreads thousands of diphtheria germs, and is a serious menace to the health, and even the life of his playmates. Third, vaccination will prevent the heart, kidneys or other body organs from damage which may develop as a consequence of the disease. Recovery from diphtheria may leave irreparable damage to vital body organs. Recently Doctor Armstrong of the United States Public Health Service reported that children vaccinated against diphtheria enjoy a resistance to other diseases more than unvaccinated children. It is a protection you should give your child.

Have your dentist see that your child has no decayed or defective teeth that will give trouble during the school year. The dentist can anticipate toothache and can repair the damage before the pain begins. And he can aid in advising diets to make healthier and stronger teeth.

Also see that your child's eyes are not defective. A child does not know whether he has or has not good vision. Children who cannot see the printed line clearly do not recognize bad eyes as the trouble because they have never enjoyed correct vision.

Satisfactory and rapid progress of your child in school will depend more upon his or her state of health than upon the teachers, books or system of instruction. In educating our children we spend a lot of money for buildings and their maintenance and for the teaching staff, only too often forgetting the importance of health in the process. A properly trained school physician who devotes to his duty enough time to locate these children who need help represents a wise investment. He can do a multitude of things that will prevent illness and aid a child in adjusting himself to his school environment.

ALCOHOL PROPAGANDISTS MAKES CHANGE OF FRONT

STOCKHOLDERS OF COOP STORE MEET ON TUES.

River Valley Co-operative Association Officials Are Guests

The Peoples Cooperative Store association held its annual meeting in the Civic and Commerce room of the city auditorium on Tuesday evening. Reports of the board of directors, the auditors and of the manager were read and approved. Three directors were also elected.

The report of the manager indicated a considerable increase in the volume of business done during the past year. An increase in operating costs was also shown. The increase is due to the NRA regulations on hours of labor the report showed.

Two of the directors whose terms expired at this time were re-elected. They were Ed. Odelin and Christ Engen. The third, Olaf Sorenson declined reelection and Otto Parbst was elected to succeed him.

The by-laws were amended to provide for the holding of the annual meeting on the second Tuesday in April instead of on the fourth Tuesday in January as heretofore.

Mr. Niemi, manager of the River Valley Cooperative store in Deer Park Township and Nels Fore, secretary of the River Valley organization were guest speakers and short talks were given by Paul A. Harris and R. M. Aalbu.

Mr. Niemi stressed the need for cooperative education in his speech and cited the growth of cooperatives in other parts of the world as well as in other parts of this state. He took occasion to give gentle criticism of the fact that the local store has not expanded its operations when it had money to spare rather than to invest it in bonds. "To collect interest is not a cooperative principle" he said. He urged the stockholders to not only patronize their store themselves, but to help increase the volume of business by urging their neighbors to patronize it as well. The volume can be doubled without adding to the operating costs, he stated, and thus the earnings would be increased and the opportunity for patronage dividends would be enlarged. Returning the net gain to the patrons thru patronage dividends is the fundamental principle of the cooperative movement, he stated.

Nels Fore urged the expansion of the local store so that it may become the central store in a cooperative organization embracing this entire section of the state.

EVERY COUNTY SEAT TO HAVE LOAN AGENCY

Institutions Will Operate Under Title II Included In All Sections

It is the intention of the Federal Housing Administration to extend the benefits of the Mutual Mortgage Insurance under Title II of the National Housing Act to every urban community, and in particular to every county seat in the United States, it was learned from Federal Housing officials.

Under the regulations, a lending institution authorized to extend mortgage loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration "must be located in an urban community which has a trading area embracing a continuous population of not less than 6,000."

There are many counties in the United States which have no towns of 6,000 census population, including county seats.

Notwithstanding the initial limitations in the Federal Housing Administration's regulations covering mutual mortgage insurance, it is the intention of the Administration that no urban communities in general, and in particular no county be denied the benefits of Title II of the National Housing Act. It was stated oofficially that the Administrator will approve, upon applications, at least one bank if "responsible and able to service the mortgage properly" in each county seat, regardless of present requirements as to capitalization and population. The regulations do not restrict approved lending institution from offering for insurance eligible mortgages on property located in any area where they are otherwise permitted by law to lend.

ENTERTAINS CLUB

Miss Elizabeth Baker entertained the members of her sewing club at her home Wednesday evening. The evening was spent sewing after which a delightful lunch was served.

H. O. Chommie Named Special County Attorney

A special meeting of the county board was held Friday to name a special county attorney to represent the board in the case of Berve vs the county in a case to test the board's legal right to reduce the county attorney's salary.

Mr. Berve who took the office of county attorney on the first of the year refuses to perform certain work with regard to renting of tax delinquent lands which was done by his predecessor, but which he insists he has no legal right to do. In view of his refusal to undertake this work, the county board felt justified in reducing his salary from $1500 per year to $1200 per year.

In appealing to the district court from the action of the board, Mr. Berve cites the fact that the salary of the county attorney has been fixed at $1500 for the past ten or fifteen years and a cut at this time is unfair and unjustified.

The board passed a resolution appointing H. O. Chommie to represent them at the hearing which is set for Friday morning at 10 o'clock before Judge M. A. Brattland.

PROWLERS WIN TWICE DURING PAST WEEKEND

Defeat Bemidji 22 to 14 and Cass Lake 40 to 26 on Saturday

The Prowlers, Lincoln High School basket ball team, defeated both Cass Lake and Bemidji during the weekend road trip. The first game was played at Bemidji before the largest crowd yet gathered to a basketball game in that city, according to reports received here. The Prowlers tucked this game away 22 to 14. The game was rough and fast with the Prowlers going into the lead early and keeping their lead thruout the entire game.

On Saturday evening the Prowlers defeated the Cass Lake quint 40 to 26 in a fast and hard-fought game. Coach Dooley stated that altho the score was much closer in the Bemidji game, it is his opinion that the Cass Lake Team is the fastest of the two. However, his boys had more confidence n themselves in the second game and therefore the more lopsided score, he said.

On Friday evening the Prowlers will meet East Grnd Forks on the auditorium floor. The Eastsiders loom up as the most formidable opponents in the district on the basis of score sheet statistics. On Tuesday evening the Plummer quint will tackle the Prowler on the home floor.

At the St. Paul branch approximately 2,400 men will be employed to conduct asembly operations. The company stated that the first consideration will be given to local men.

13,300 Man-Hours of Work to Be Had On Construction of the New Postoffice

Official confirmation of the new post office project for Thief River Falls was received Saturday at the National Reemployment Office from the Federal Works Administration.

The plans which were drawn by Ray Gauger, the architect who designed the new city auditorium, were approved and the call for bids submitted for advertisement about January 1st.

It has been estimated that there will be approximately 13,300 man-hours of work on the new building and the cost will be in the neighborhood of $42,500. The appropriation for the construction totals $47-000 but unless some unforseen complications arise the full amount will not be used.

Wages on this job is expected to be fixed at 55 cents per hour for unskilled labor, 65 cents per hour for semi-skilled labor and 85 cents per hour for skilled labor.

BOULEVARD IS APPROVED BY PARK BOARD

Plans for Bridge Approach Improvements Are Discussed Monday

Plans for a parkway approach to the new Third street bridge were presented to the Park board at its meeting on Monday evening by Mr. Torgerson, state highway engineer.

The plans call for a two-lane boulevard starting where the Angle road turns north towards the river a short distance out of the city, northwestward into the city and west to within a block of the bridge. The project which calls for two twenty-four foot drives seperated by a twenty-eight foot grass plot, making it 110 feet in width, has not yet been estimated as to cost Mr. Torgerson stated, but it represents what the state is willing to construct. The city would only be called upon to stand the cost of the four curbs.

Plans for the paving of the west approach to the bridge were also considered by the board. This project would include paving from the Soo Line tracks to the bridge with a large circle at the point where Red Lake Boulevard intersects and would include landscaping and tree planting to harmonize with the Elks Memorial Park which adjoins the approach. Some landscaping on the east bank of the river north of the bridge is also being considered.

Lincoln Hi Debaters Win From R. L. Falls

A three to nothing decision in favor of Lincoln High school was rendered by the judges of the debate between Red Lake Falls High School and the Thief River Falls High School debators. Members of the Thief River team, which upheld the affirmative of the question were: Corlan Dokken, Kendall Gustafson, and Dorothy Rau; and the members of the Red Lake Falls team were Bernice Johnson, Paul DuCharm, and Emerell Smith, who upheld the negative. The question was: Resolve: That the Federal Government Should adopt a Policy of Equalizing Educational Opportunities Throughout the Nation by Means of Annual Grants to the Several States for Public and Elementary and Secondary Education.

The negative team pointed out that if taxes were levied and collected by the federal government for schools that the school system would be subjected to the grafting of political bosses. The affirmative pointed out that under the present method, in regions which were striken by drouth, schools were being closed and that if the federal government were in charge of the operation they would now be open.

Presumably due to the cold weather only a small crowd attended.

Judge Torrance Declares W. E. Day Elected to House

W. E. Day's election to the House of Representatives by eleven votes was certified by Judge Graham M. Torrance of Bemidji last week following the re-count and hearings on disputed ballots. Day, who won the election by 19 votes on the unofficial returns, was deprived of his seat by a mistake in the final tabulations by the Clearwater county canvassing Board, and brought contest proceedings against his opponent Marius Waldal of Plummer who had had received the certificate of election from the secretary of State, Mike Holm, Mr. Waldal is still seated in the legislature and participated in the organization of the House, voting for the conservative choice for speaker, Geo. Johnson of Duluth. He was given the chairmanship of the Corporations committee.

The case will now go to the legislature, the house being the final judge of who shall sit in its assembly.

LOCAL F-LABOR CLUB CONDEMNS A NAME CHANGE

Herman Kjos Elected Temporary Chairman of Meet Friday Evening

A good attendance featured th regular monthly meeting of the Thief River Falls Farmer- Labor Association club at the court house last Friday evening. Due to the absence of the chairman and the secretary the election of officers was postponed until an undetermined date when a special meeting will be held for that purpose.

Herman A. Kjos was elected temporary chairman and Arthur Johnson temporary secretary. A lively discussion about the attempts being made to change the party name as well as the change in the name of the official organ from Farmer-Labor Leader to Minnesota Leader. Both moves were condemned in resolutions unanimously adopted.

Methods to be adopted to keep the association thoroughly democratic were discussed and it appears likely that the club will unite on a plan to present to the next state gathering in the form of amendments to the constitution which will bring all questions of vital importance to a referendum of all association members.

A resolution condemning the appointment of "All-party" persons to key positions while bonafide Farmer-Laborite received not even unimportant jobs was passed; in another resolution the Club went on record as being very firmly set against any plan to change the name of the Association and in a third resolution the opinion of the group was voiced against the change of the name of the official publication of the Farmer-Labor Association to the name of the "Minnesota Leader." All resolutions were adopted without a dissenting vote.

TOWN AND CITY HEADS MEET ON RELIEF ISSUES

One-Mill Levy To Be Made In Each Town; U. S. to Pay the Rest

Members of the Pennington county townboards, the county board, the city council and the County Relief Officer assembled at the county court house Friday afternoon January 18, to discuss the township system of relief which was made mandatory by a referendum at the general election.

In her address, Miss Johnson of the State Office, stated that a tax of one mill would be levied upon the valuation of each township, the receipts of this tax would be used for relief in the township from which it was collected. However, after the funds made available by the one mill tax had been used the expenditures for relief wouldn't stop as the Federal Government would then provide the needed funds. The tax funds would not be used for hospitalzation or burials, she explained, that the township would have to care for these out of a separate fund provided by the township.

Miss Johnson read a list of the number of cases on relief in the different townships the cases totaled up to 221. She added that this figure did not give the number of people, just cases. Town of North and the city of Thief River had the most cases, which is 92 per cent of all persons on relief.

When a transient receives relief from the Government he automaticaly became a resident of the vicinity, however, if such cases of relief are handled by the city or township the transient would not gain residence. In this district which consists of Rosseau, Kittson, Marshall, Polk, Pennington, Red Lake, Beltrami and Clearwater counties the transient centers are Bemidji and Crookston. In a transient case Mrs. King, the new relief officer, is to be notified, she in turn will notify the above centers. Then if the federal government sees fit they will pay the fare of these transients back to their home state.

Mrs. King assurred her cooperation with the members of the townboard in every way in order that the township plan may be a sucess. Persons wishing to confer with her are asked to come to her office in the city auditorium.

Members Only to Be Admitted to W.P.A. Meetings Hereafter

The Workmen's Protective association held its regular meeting at the Court House on Monday evening, at which time the group decided that in the future the meetings will be closed to the public and only members will be admitted as provided by the constitution and by-laws. Persons wishing to join the organization may secure application blank, from the members of the executive committee or from him, Mr. Wm. Douville, president of the group stated.

Following the business meeting the group was addressed by R. M. Aalbu who outlined the purpose of the Goldborough Bill recently introduced by Congressman Goldesborough of Virginia, which provides for the establishment of a Bank of the United States which would use the free gold, that is gold against which there is no currency issued, to the amount of about $4,800,000,000, owned by the government for the purpose of retiring the national debt. He urged the members of the workmen's group to write their Congressman and Senators to support the Bill.

WHY NOT REVIVE THE DOG ORDINANCE?

Last week we were treated to a learned discourse on pestiferous dogs, cut-prices on official printing, variations in costs, weeping in public, self-preservation and glass houses.

Inasmuch as we do not do enough night-prowling to be an authority on yapping dogs, we will just have to try to laugh that one off. But has the big he-man considered what the neighbors think when they see him heaving rocks at the exuberant puppy from the safe side of a high board fence?

Apparently we are not any too good at cost-finding either. For instance we never could figure out how the costs connected with city printing could drop so much in six weeks that a cut in the from 75 cents per folio to 10 cents per folio could be justified. In our abysmal ignorance we took it for granted it was done to "eliminate competition". And being the competing bidder we jumped to the conclusion that we were the competition that was to be eliminated. If we were wrong in our deductions we will of course offer profound apologies.

If we have done some weeping in public that may perhaps be due to the fact that the public is our friends. It is their battles we have tried to fight since we started this paper. If we need help, we will go to the public and get it. It is the only place we can expect to get it. If we had been serving the chain bankers, the utility crowd and the Republican hierarchy we would have gone to them when we needed help, just as very likely our pleasant competitors have done. So it would appear that we have both followed out the dictates of the law ow self-preservation.

In closing this incident, we might observe that we are not worried about our "glass house" and if our amiable friends have any hefty rocks to throw, just let them fly. In the meantime all the cards have not been turned face up, but they can be if there is anyone that wants to call for a showdown.

MORE TRUTH THAN POETRY

Ted Cook in his "Cook Coos" column in the Minneapolis Tribune quotes an editorial from somewhere as asking, "Where will the Senate investigation of munitions profits ultimately lead?" and then answers the question by saying that it will lead to a pigeon hole. To which we would add that Cook is probably far from "cuckoo".

Violence vs. Non-Violence

How long could a column like this desist from some mention of the "trial of the century"—the Hauptmann case? Whether or not Bruno is guilty, the fact remains that he commands more publicity than the kidnap news did two years ago; the kidnap news, in turn, put Lindbergh's own publicity record (after the Atlantic flight) to shame; while all of them far, far outstrip any mention that was ever made of the elder Lindbergh, who objected to America's entrance into the World War, or something.

Our newspapers learned the news value of violence when the World War made their circulation increase by leaps and bounds. Ever since that time, the dailies have made it a point to report some war or other—right now they are concerned with gangsters, kidnappers, and racketeers. This idea is behind the unprecedented publicity given to the "Bruno case." The newswriters and their public like it.

Every little war rumor is magnified in the daily press, while movements that fight against war are given scanty space on page seven or ignored altogether. Keep people from murdering each other—that isn't news. Turn them loose to slaughter one another—THAT'S NEWS.

They Steal Our Thunder

The Columbus (O.) Dispatch calls Amelia Earhart a "viqueen," or female viking, which only goes to show you can't start anything, even a fictionary of punonyms, without the idea being copied .P. S. If Lindbergh was hero, would this make Amela shero?

The Stage of the Human Race

"Infancy, childhood, adolescence, and adulthood are not different degrees of the same thing, but entirely different things. Children are not little women and men. The infant does not reason; it imitates. The child imitates, but begins also to reason. The youth is tossed hither and yon between the two tendencies—to imitate and to reason. The adult reasons. It was thus that the human species evolved." Thus saith Warren Edwin Brokaw, in his Equitable Society. If this is true (and it has all the earmarks of truth) the human species is only in its infancy. There are some precocious children among them, but in the main the people are like sheep—they follow their leaders. They should know enough to reason for themselves—but until that time, they must pick their bellwethers and go through to the final conflict.

Hitler and the Election

A bunch of people recently decided to be safe and stay with Hitler by voting to go under German rule rather than incur Hitler's wrath by voting against such a measure. That is the long and the short of the Saar-y mess just concluded. It was a very democratic and peaceful affair, indeed.

Ex-precedent—a custom no longer in force (not to be confused with "ex-president," of which many people have custom.)

Recovery—getting back what one can out of an R. F. C. loan.

Naturalize—what boys and girls skate on in winter, besides skates.

Ratify—Lloyd George once gave a speech during which a heckler insisted on shouting "Rats!" in a loud voice at frequent intervals. The speaker finally remarked: "Will someone please bring the gentleman his dinner?"

And if Lloyd George's speech was "ratified," the heckler certainly was mortified.

Vermilion a Roman Color

The color name vermilion is derived from the Latin "Vermilicus"—translated "shining worm—or 80-fold color." Because of its brilliance vermilion has always been used to signify divine power. The ancient Romans used the hue to color the faces of their statutes of deities.

CAPITOL NEWS REVIEW
By
A. I. Harris

Members of the Legislature were the invited guests last Friday night at the Minnesota Editorial Association banquet and listened to Clayton Rand of Mississippi, the principal speaker, undoubtedly one of the most clever platform magicians of the country * * * Mr. Rand's discourse was delightful as an artistic presentation despite the fact that most of his utterances were pure sophistry. . . .

Here is the recovery formula Mr. Rand offers the country: Keep government out of business. Work harder. Spend less. Sell more . . . What a hearty laugh for the devil! . . . .

Some more from Mr. Rand: You cannot change human nature. We live in a fluctuating world, therefore we fluctuate between prosperous eras and depression eras. Too much prosperity is bad for us anyway. We deserve what we are getting because of our spiritual sins. Don't worry, we got out of former depressions and therefore we will get out of this depression. . . .

This is optimism for those of means who do not suffer in a physical way from depressions, but for the masses who know something about the reality of stark hunger the picture is rather black. Are we ready to admit that the problem of recurrent depressions has got us licked? Are we going to accept as a finality an economic order under which recurrent depressions are an admitted certainty? . . . .

Talking about "square deal in business," "rededication of righteousness," and "spiritual regeneration" are nice after-dinner words, but they do not fill the stomachs of hungry children nor soothe the pangs of starving men and women. They are wholly deficient in calory content. . . During times of so-called prosperity the masses for the most part do not live on much more than the bare subsistence level while during times of depression. . . well, it is just too bad. . . And fellows like Rand come along and talk about "rekindling of souls," and stuff like that. . . . .

The best answer the legislature can give to Mr. Rand is that the present session is at least going to try to do something about recurrent depressions besides cowardly surrendering to the theory that nothing can be done about it. The Legislature has already passed a resolution memorializing Congress to fix minimum prices on basic farm commodities. It will be confronted with bills attacking the very conditions which Mr. Rand says cannot and should not be attacked. . . And a most hopeful sign is the fact that most of the conservaitve members, realizing that progressive social and economic legislation is the imperative need of the day, have expressed a willingness to at least go some distance with the Governor in the interest of effecting something for the common good. . .

An interesting situation affecting gasoline taxes collected by the state of Minnesota from the oil companies was brought to light in a case recently tried in Minneapolis. Minnesota statutes allow the oil companies to deduct 3 per cent from the amount of tax for evaporation and loss. The practice among the major oil companies has been to allow the attendants at the oil stations no amount whatever for evaporation and loss. In the trial of this law suit in Minneapolis the oil company contended that the loss in dispensing gasoline was non-existing or so slight as to be negligible. If the contention of the gasoline company in the lawsuit is correct, the state should not allow 3 per cent for reduction on shrinkage.

Attorney General Harry Peterson has announced that he will appeal to the State Supreme Court the District court decision on the two-tokens-for-15c street car case. "Some issues of fact were decided," Mr. Peterson said, "which we did not understand were involved. We believe that the decision is erroneous." The Railroad and Warehouse Commission a few months ago issued an order directing the Twin City Rapid Transit Co. to issue two tokens for 15 cents.

Several conservative members of the House and Senate have said that they are in favor of higher income taxes in the upper brackets. We will soon find out.

Senate conservatives are threatening to put through a sales tax in spite of Governor Olson's announced intention of vetoing such a bill. Legislation of this kind will never lighten the burden of the people. It is well-known that sales taxes are always passed on to the consumer and that they require the rank and file of the people to pay the government bills for the rich. Any attempt to foist a sales tax on the people of Minnesota should be resisted.

There is much discussion throughout the state as to whether it would be better to restore the motor vehicle fee to the 1932 level or to raise the gas tax in order to match federal highway aid. Many persons appear to believe that a one-cent increase in gas tax would supply as much money as the license fee restoration. However, the highway department would receive only $2,200,000 a year from a one-cent gas tax increase compared with nearly $4,000,0000 more a year from normal license fees. The county receives one-third of all gas tax collections. It will require nearly $4,000,000 a year addtional funds to match the federal government money.

LIKE DADDY
by Lawrence Hawthorne

"When I'm a man, I want to be like Daddy!"
I heard my boy remark the other day.
"An' so do I!" declared his baby brother.
A moment later they resumed their play;
But I could not dismiss the thought so quickly.
It challenged me with countless hopes and fears.
And brought a keener sense of obligation
That shall forever guide me down the years.

My boys believe their dad is what he should be (Just as your children put their trust in you),
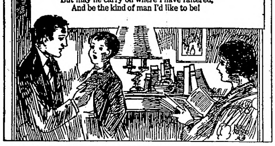
And oh, how earnestly I pray for guidance
To meet the test as they expect me to!
The day will come when I shall disappoint them—
When they must learn how humble is the man
To whom they now impute such might and virtue,
For so have children grown since time began.

I want my boys to want to be "like Daddy,"
And yet I hope for them a finer thing—
A greater gift from manhood's boundless treasure
Than such a wish fulfilled could ever bring.
I hope that each will grow in strength and wisdom,
Nor be content should he become like me;
But may he carry on where I have faltered,
And be the kind of man I'd like to be!



Washington Kaleidoscope

From Letter by Cong. Paul Kvale

Magic and fantastic as it may at first sound, the House heard with deep interest and with thoughtful attention a carefully studied plan proposed by Rep. Goldsborough of Maryland, by which the whole national debt would be wiped clean, future interest payments on government bonds to the tune of about a round billion a year made unnecessary depositors in all banks closed at least since the beginning of the year 1930 will be repaid in full, and—most impressive of all the stangle hold of the organized banking powers of the nation will be broken, once and for all, as far as government credit is concerned.

To make it the more unbelieable, ths tremendous series of reforms is to be accomplished without a cent of cost to the American taxpayer, says the author of the proposal. And he has the well-deserved reputation of being one of the most reliable and one of the soundest students of our banking, currency and credit system upon whom we can call.

The bill proposes a central bank to which the federal government can go when it needs to finance or to refinance its indebtedness for any expenditures. Bonds already out would be paid in currency—non-interest bearing and circulating—and future obligations necessitated by usual or unusual expense would be financed by the new federal bank, without bonding and calling for interest payments that private bankers have been able to demand as they liked. It would be built upon the gold reserves now held in the Treasury, and would expand its credit operations exactly after the manner of the private banking system today.

It brings into the open a fact that for some reason has been carefully subdued in the press and on the stump in the past by most politicians and statesman, that is, the fact that the banking clique do exercise a power over the government, no matter what party may be in power, of dictating what economic or political plans may or may not be advocated. They have done it. and are doing it, by the most simple expedient of threatening to stay out of the field of competitors when the next refunding or refinancing operation is put forward by the Treasury. Thus they are able to threaten to reduce the market price of bonds by demanding higher interest rates on the new securities, thereby bringing unsteadiness to the federal bond market and consequently to industrial securities, and establishing uncertainty in the market and the weakening—so they claim—of the government credit.

The writer has secured at his own expense a number of Goldsborough speech, and will be happy to send it to interested parties on request. Or address your editor, who will relay your request. It is worth studying, and goes to the very heart of the New Deal struggle for recovery and security. Apparently, however, the administration itself through its authorized leaders is unable to take a direct hand in this fight, which promises to be one of the biggest which the present Congress has to face. But the press and the leaders are strictly hands-off for the present. That does not worry Congressman Goldsborough, nor Senator Cutting, nor the others who are in this to a finish. Already the old 'Wall Street" and the "International Bankers" and the other similar phrases are being taken off the shelves and dusted for action.

From Letter by Cong. E. J. Ryan

Restoration of farm buying power is the foundation of business recovery. Numerous studies indicate that business has varied in direct proportion to the strength of the purchasing power of the farmer. Differing proposals are offered as to how to most effectively bolster farm purchasing power.

—o—

I discussed a few days ago the legislative program of the Farmer's Union with Mr. D. H. Kennedy, National Secretary of the Farmer's Union. The essence of this program is the cost of production bill, H. R. 1407, introduced by Representative Sam C. Massingale of Oklahoma. This bill proposes. . . .

That the policy of Congress shall be to secure to farmers a price not less than the cost of production plus a reasonable profit.

That to accomplish this, the amount of a product consumed in the domestc market shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that portion of the product shall be purchased at a guaranteed price determined by the Secretary.

That the remainder of the crop shall be disposed of, exported, or withheld from market as the Secretary sees fit.

That if imports are found to affect adversely the local market, they are to be declared unlawful.

That the Secretary of Agriculture be empowered to license all dealers in farm produce and to inspect their books and that it shall be unlawful for any licensee to purchase farm products for less than the fixed price.

A NAZI TERROR RECORD

Hamburg (TIS)—487 years of hard labor and 565 years of prison against anti-Fascists—this is the balance sheet of the Nazi terror tribunals during November, 1934. In the districts of and around Hamburg alone more than 100 anti-Fascist workers were sentenced to 143 years of hard labor and 119 years of prison. Most of the sentences pronounced are for alleged high treason, efforts to revive suppressed political parties, and distribution of illegal literature. Indicatve of the growing unrest among small business people are the numerous prison sentences meted out for insults to the Fuehrer and his government.

HAROLD TITUS

Author of THE MAN FROM YONDER

WHEN HAROLD TITUS writes an outdoor story with a lumber camp setting he puts into it not alone the ability of a master literary craftsman but an intimate knowledge of the subject gained through personal experience. When he writes of the North Woods, of lumber jacks and their ways, he knows what he is talking about, for he was born and spent his boyhood days among the lumber camps that then dotted northern Michigan.

After graduating from the University of Michigan, Titus secured a position as reporter on the Detroit News. When the World war came he enlisted in the American army and served throughout the conflict as a sergeant in the ordnance service. With the close of the war he went back to his home county to write and to raise fruit on his farm.

Supreme in the field that he has chosen to make his own—the American woods—Harold Titus has written many stirring tales that have won wide popularity—among them, "Below Zero," "Code of the North," "Conquered," "The Last Straw" and "Timber." Now you may read his latest story, "The Man From Yonder," as it appears serially in this paper.

SALES TAX ACT IS INTRODUCED IN LEGISLATURE

$11,000,000 Relief Bill Gets Consideration in the State Senate

By Lt. Gov. Hjalmer Peterson

Minnesota's relief problem and tax reform were brought sharply to the fore in the third week of the Legislature's session.

The all important relief question was dramatized to the legislators of both branches in a joint meeting in the house chamber.

The legislators heard Governor Olson tell them of the increased relief load and the imperative need for prompt legislative action to raise sufficent funds within the state to enable it to obtain adequate federal relief money under the new national program.

Relief Official Speaks

They heard Howard O. Hunter of Chicago, regional Federal Emergency Relief administrator, tell them that the state and its local subdivisions must raise $10,000,000 for the next year to meet the federal requirements. Mr. Hunter flung out the ultimatum that after March 1 Minnesota will receive no more federal relief funds unless the state complies with the national government's terms.

A picture of the destitution among farmers in the drouth areas in the western part of the state was given by Judge J. L. Keating of Ortonville, who asked a special appropriation of $750,000 for the drouth counties.

The morning session will begin at 9:30 A. M., in the city hall. It will be entirely informal. Municipal officials will have the opportunity to discuss any subject of interest. Goodhue County Wins Rural Play Contest

Goodhue county came out the winner in the finals of the second annual State-wide Rural One-Act Play Contest, held at University Farm during Farmers and Homemakers Week. Nine county casts, each the champion in its district were entered. The excellent performances given by all the casts, as well as the large crowds which stayed away from other interesting features of the short course to watch the contest proved that farm folks of the state have a great deal of dramatic ability and take an enthusiastic interest in this type of recreation and self-expression.

Second in the contest was won by Blue Earth county. Beltrami's players placed third, Itasca and Roseau tied for fourth, and Todd county ranked fifth. Other counties entered in the finals were Carlton, Hennepin and Nicollet. During the year, more than 40 counties held elimination contests, each with from five to a dozen local casts trying for county honors.

Prizes for the Goodhue players included a championship plaque for the cast and a fountain pen for each player. Members of the cast represent the farm bureau club of Belle Creek township, a community which has its own hall and each year stages a number of plays. The winning play was entitled "The Dummy" and was directed by Joseph Gorman, Jr., who also played a leading part. Other cast members were Mrs. Mary O'Riley, Laverne Haas, Mrs. Geo. Ryan, and Robert Barry.

A. F. Engebretson, University Farm, has been named charman of the rural play contest for the coming year, which will again be sponsored by the University Department of Agriculture.

MOORH'D JURY ACQUITS BANCO HEAD THURSDAY

Found Not Guilty After 18 Hours of Deliberation By the Jury

By Henry G. Tiegan

J. Cameron Thomson, president of the Northwest Bancorporation, was acquitted of the charge of second degree larceny by a jury at Moorhead on Thursday of last week.

The verdict of the jury came as a surprise to those who had followed the trial. There can be little doubt that the prosecution had established the fact that purchasers of "Banco" stock had been defrauded through misrepresentations of the company and its agents.

The facts upon which the prosecution based its case are in brief as follows:

1. That dividends were being paid for the years 1930 and 1931 in excess of earnings.
2. That the Bancorporation actually sustained losses during these years.
3. That the literature and letters of the Bancorporation to prospective stockholders and to employees of its affiliated banks boasted of profits that did not exist. Claim was made in the company's literature that its profits amounted to $3.20 per share, though dividends were only $1.80 per share.

Contradictory Information

The prosecution showed from the Bancorporation's books that Mr. Thomson, the defendant, did not represent to the directors what his and the company's literature and letters represented t

King stated that the building could be had for $40 per month after March first and that this included heating of the building. The council approved of the rental of the building as there are now supplies in the building and the entire space would be needed, later on when all the supplies come in.

Creamery Stockholders Cite Earnings And Investment to Prevent Bldg. Sale

The group of stockholders who objected to the sale of the cooperative creamery building in this city to the Land O' Lakes organization and brought proceedings against the board of directors to stop the sale, issued a statement to the stockholders and to the public this week in which they cite the earnings of the plant for the past several years as taken from the records of the creamery.

The statement which is signed by L. O. Sterseth, P. H. Wright, Knute Solheim, Christian Steen, Rasmus Oen, Gordon M. Olson, Louis Dimmen, Peter Hornseth, Albert Olson, Ed. Grundhous, Ed. O. Vigen and Tobias Stene criticises the Land O' Lakes organization as attempting to get poesession of the building at an unreasonable low figure. The statement follows:

A Statement of the Thief River Falls Co-operative
Creamery Association, covering the last ten years.

"In 1924, we built our fine new creamery building. It was carried along in our yearly list of assets at its cost with a small percentage charged off each year for depreciation in value.

But it was kept in good repair, improvements made, and it is today as good as new, and just as valuable. With its use and the help of our good farmers, we paid for it, until today only $7,800.00 of our building bonds remain outstanding.

And we made a profit every year.

In 1928, our yearly published statement showed that we had three valuable properties,—towit:

New Creamery plant valued at	$ 50,467.01
Old creamery plant valued at	10,059.85
2 residences valued at	4,257.51
Machinery and equipment valued at	14,058.85
Total	$ 78,843.22
Less depreciation	24,628.70
Leaving net fixed assets owned by us	$ 54,214.52

"But from that time on, something began to happen to our property. The Land O'Lakes began to get it, piece by piece.

"In 1929, our creamery board, without a vote of the stockholders sold to the Land O'Lakes for

Hearing is Held Wed. On Co. Attorney Pay

A hearing was conducted Wednesday forenoon before District Judge M. A. Brattland in the action instituted by County Attorney H. O. Berve against the county board for reducing his salary $300. Testimony was heard from both sides of the case and the court's decision will be announced in a few days.

Those called to the witness stand were County Auditor H Fowler and the former County Attorney P. A. Lundgren. Mr Lundgren stated that when the county board took action to reduce his salary in 1932 he told them he would be willing to accept $1000 per year if the board would relieve him of the necessity of handling the work of tax attachments or if he were to continue to handle the tax attachments he would expect the full $1500 per year for his work.

Among other things brought out by Mr. Berve in his plea for the court's decision was that the County Attorney's salary had been $1500 from 1925 up to the first of this year, and that there are more criminal cases on the court calendar than there has been during any of the previous years.

H. O. Chommie was selected by the county board to represent them in the case, while Mr. Berve handled his own.

Defeats Plummer Tuesday 32 To 24 in Hard Fought Contest

The win for the local boys virtually assures them of winning the district championship this year unless some unexpected upset occurs during the district tournament.

SERA Cannot Provide General Work Report Issued Recently Says

An avalanche of requests for approval of work projects to provide jobe for unemployed has prompted Walter F. McGregor, director of the work division of the Minnesota SERA (State Emergency Relief administration), to remind public officials authorized to make recommendations, that federal regulations definitely limit the scope of these activities.

Contrary to the view held by many, the SERA work program is not intended to provide general employment, the work director pointed out. Rather it aims to offer individuals now on relief rolls the opportunity to earn a cash income equal to the relief budget.

Work relief laborers are selected from the relief rolls exclusively. Eligibility is the only basis on which any individual can be granted relief. The same scrutiny will be exercised in the future as in the past to determine the needs of an applicant, the work director sisted.

There are other government agencies planning work for unemployed not now receiving relief, MacGregor said. Persons out of work, he added, but not absolutely dependent on public assistance, should register with the National Re-employment service which maintains offices throughout the state.

COURT VERDICT FINDS F-TRUCK PURCHASE O.K.

Decision by Judge Brattland Given to Clerk of Court January 22nd

A decision was handed down by District Judge M. A. Brattland in favor of the city council in the case involving the purchase of a fire-truck by that body. Action was instituted against the city by H. A. Brumund on behalf of the taxpayers of the city; it was thought that the city council had no power to purchase the truck without making special arrangements by a tax levy.

In arriving at his decision Judge Brattland brought out the fact that the laws of 1895 provided that, for those branches of municipal government that had no special fund out of which to pay the cost of operation these expenses were to be paid out of the current expense fund. And inasmuch as there is no special fund for the Fire Department of the city and as there is no special fund raised by revenue for the municipal power plant, these departments' expenses had to be paid out of the current expense fund. All income derived from any branch of city government which is supported by the current expense fund must be turned over to this fund. An accurate account of money paid in to this fund from the water and light department must be kept. It was held legal to purchase the truck because the anticipated earnings of the municipal power plant would, by this law, go into the current expense fund and out of this fund the fire department is supported.

The case was dismissed Tuesday, January 22 and the defendants in the case were entitled to recover their costs and disbursements according to the statutes. Attorneys for the defendants were Theo. Quale and H. O. Chommie, and for the plaintiff Paul Lundgren and Lincoln Arnold.

The Man from Yonder

A New Serial by

HAROLD TITUS

No one knew anything about Ben Elliott when he arrived in Tincup, but it wasn't long before his name was on every tongue, for hadn't he given "Bull" Duval, Nick Brandon's hired thug, a beating he would never forget; hadn't he taken over the impossible job of running the Hoot Owl outfit after many an older and more experienced man had failed; and hadn't he had the courage to defy Brandon himself, the man who held Tincup in the hollow of his hand?

The old-timers stood by and scratched their heads—here was a youngster doing things that couldn't be done and doing them well, in spite of fire and dynamite and many another hazard. And Ben carried on, unconscious of the magnitude of his job, carried on for the sake of a little girl whom he had never seen—until one day he discovered that she was a little girl no longer, but a lovely young woman—and the one person in all the world that Nick Brandon really cared for.

Here, indeed, were complications, but Ben Elliott thrived on complications though he had to admit that the winning of Dawn McManus was the toughest job he had ever tackled.

Harold Titus tells this thrilling tale of romance and adventure in his latest North Woods story, "The Man From Yonder." Readers of this paper who are familiar with the clean, vigorous stories that Titus writes will be glad to know that we have obtained the publication rights to "The Man From Yonder." All of our readers, we are sure, will enjoy reading it as it appears serially in these columns.

ALL PROMISES MADE BY WETS HAVE BEEN BROKEN

By W. G. Calderwood

One of the many promises which induced the voters in 37 states to vote for repeal was the assurance that, if liquor were legalized under reasonable taxation, it would balance the very gravely unbalanced Federal budget. The deficit for the three years of the depression, 1930, '31 and '32 averaged about $1,400,000,000 And, before repeal, it was variously estimated that the annual revenue to be derived from beer alone would be from $1,125,000,000 to $5,000,000,000. The actual amount received from all intoxicating beverages, including beer, in 1934, the first calendar year after repeal, was $374,000,000, or less than one-third of the lowest estimate for beer only. But in the meantime, the deficit for 1934, '35 and '36 will be $4,000,000,000 per year acording to present official estimates. Liquor revenue based upon the 1934 figures will meet about nine per cent of this amount, leaving 91 per cent, or $3,626,000,000 to be raised from other sources.

Another promise that the politicians gave to the cheerful voter as an inducement for voting for the return of legalized liquor was the fairy tale that it would reduce taxes. But instead of the promised reduction the tax payer was handed an increase of 65%. Otherwise stated, the entire receipts from liquor were absorbed and $2,672,239,000 in additional taxes is required!

The promise was a balanced budget; but instead the deficit was nearly trebled.

The promise was reduced taxes; but instead came a 65% increase.

And all of the sweet promises have failed. The saloon is back, in double numbers; the brewers and distillers are again in politics bigger than ever and with new tricks; bootlegging has not declined; drinking has increased; the pitfalls and traps for youth are more and worse; unemployment is greater, and the cost of enforcing regulation is likely to exceed the cost of prohibition enforcement, and be no more effective.

Repeal was gold in the hope, but dross in the hand.

Border Lakes Power Development Opposed

E. V. Willard, Commissioner of Conservation, Frank Yetka, secretary of the Minnesota Conservation Commission, and Mathias N. Orfield, assistant attorney general, left St. Paul Sunday for Washington, D. C., where the delegation will appear before the Federal Power Commission to oppose further development of water power in the border lakes region at this time.

A petition before the federal commission by the Pigeon River Lumber Company for additoinal water power development is bringing the question to an immediate issue.

The Minnesota Conservation Commission, in a resolution, delegated the commissioner and secretary of the commission to cooperate with the attorney general's office in opposing this water power development at the Washington hearing. It was pointed out that water power development in the border lakes region should be postponed at least until "such time as a greater economic necessity is shown."

Value of the border lakes region from the recreational angle was stressed by the commission. As most of the lands adjacent and tributary to the Pigeon River are located within the Grand Portage State forest and the Superior National forest and are now or probably will be publicly owned in the near future, "it may be well that the best public interests will be served by public rather than by private water power development."

A public hearing in the question was held by the commission in Duluth, January 4 and 5, at which time proponents and opponents of the lumber company's proposal were heard.

Nation's Jobless Groups To Unite in Convention At Washington, Mar. 3-4

With the echoes of the recent National Unemployment Day demonstrations still resounding, plans have now been made to unite the nation's non-partisan unemployed and relife workers' union, into a national organzation.

"The plans of the National Provisional Committee," according to David Lasser, chairman, "will call for a national convention in Washington, D. C., March 2-4. The midpoint in President Roosevelt's administration will mark the birth of a powerful nation-wide non-partisan and democratically run organization of the unemployed.

"Already organizations in 24 states are supporting the plans of the national committee.

"The power and enthusiasm of the November 24th meetings," continued Lasser, "was a tremendous stimulant to countless local and district groups struggling with their local problems; and to larger groups which looked with indifference on a national movement.

"The ability of the unemployed to act together on a national scale, bringing 350,000 to the streets for a fundamental series of demands, revealed the power and potentialities of a country-wide movement.

"The necessity for the unemployed to act on a national scale has been made more necessary than ever since the announcement of the new work relief program of the administration. The fight against the starvation wage proposed by the plan, and the struggle for the right of relief workers to organize and bargain collectively, must be waged throughout the entire country.

"Our organization must seek definite cooperation with organized labor so that the organization of the jobless and trade unions may fight their battles side by side. The unemployed have already shown splendid solidarity with labor by their refusal to scab and their active support in countless strikes."

Lay Forgetfulness to Mice

The reason that a cat forgets its master is stated to be because cats eat mice, which are eminently the cause for forgetfulness. In Russia, Jewish boys are not allowed to stroke a cat lest they lose their powers of memory. This prohibition does not extend to girls, however.

Rough Fish Removal Aids Lake Conditions

With 31 fishing agreements in effect, during the month of December, 335,112 pounds of carp, 75,665 pounds of buffalo fish, 3,500 pounds of sheepshead and 49,801 pounds of dogfish, bullheads and miscellaneous rough fish were removed from lakes fished, Erling Swenson, director of the state division of Game and Fish, reported.

"Removal of rough fish with operations for the most part confined to the southern part of the state will improve conditions for game fishes and at the same time provides added revenue for Game and Fish division activities for fish lakes improvement," Mr. Swenson said. "Rescue of game fishes is carried on in the same operation as that for removal of rough fish. Because of the low lake levels prevailing at many of our lakes, fishing activities are confined to the shallower lakes.

"Prices for rough fish have been slightly lower as compared to a year ago but an increase in production will undoubtedly result in the same amount of revenue for the division"

Lakes fished during the month were Bingham and Summit, Cottonwood county; Bright and George, Martin county; Dora, LeSeuer county; Round and Pearl, Jackson county; Spring, Crystal and Loon, Blue Earth county; Elizabeth, Kandiyohi county, and Sarah in Murray county.

ASKS FIGHT FOR LOWER GAS RATES

Milwaukee—Mayor Daniel W. Hoan has in his capacity as chairman of the United States Conference of Mayors, issued a statement suggesting that middle western cities form an alliance for the purpose of lowering the cost of gas by developing and making available to cities natural gas.

The mayor stated that he is asking that Mayor Frank Couzens of Detroit accept the chairmanship of a committee to bring about such an alliance or that he ask John W. Smith, president of the Detroit city council to act n this capacity.

Highway Dept. Cannot Open Local Roads

Hundreds of plans that the state highway department operate snow plows over county and township roads have been received by the department in the past two weeks, but it is impossible to grant such requests, according to an announcement by N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner.

"During the recent heavy snows," said Mr. Elsberg, "we received letters, telegrams and telephone calls from all parts of the state asking that we open up particular stretches of local roads. The department would be glad to do this, but legal restriction of our operations to the trunk system, coupled with lack of funds, makes it impossible.

"It has taxed the highway department's equipment to keep the trunks open, and if we were to undertake plowing operations on local roads as weel the situation could not be handled.

"Farmers also have complained that snow plows have dismantled their mail boxes along the trunk highways. While our crews are instructed to use as much caution as possible about such things, the roads have to be kept clear. With day and night polwing in heavy snow, it is often impossible to avoid striking a mail box. The benefits to the farmer of having his main highway opened up in all weather should compensate for any inconvenence of this character."

STATE-WIDE RESPONSE TO BIRD FEEDING APPEAL

From all sections of Minnesota reports are swarming into the offices of the state division of Game and Fish relative to local campaigns for winter feeding of upland game birds, according to Charles McFarlane, deputy division director. Early sub-zero weather coupled with heavy snows in most of the state made it imperative that artificial means be used to save the game birds from actual starvation in many localities where natural food was abnormally scarce, Mr. McFarlane said.

Officials of the Game and Fish division are "deeply grateful" for the splendid cooperation they have received throughout all sections of the state in the campaign to save game birds. Acknowledgment is made of the efforts put forth by sportsmen and conservation organizations, Boy Scouts, 4-H clubs and other groups in providing food for upland game birds.

"While our division was and is prepared to take care of any emergency cases where birds are threatened because of lack of food, we do not have the funds necessary to provide feed for all parts of the large state, all sections of which have their quotas of wild life," Mr. McFarlane stated.

WAR PREPARATIONS LEAD TO LABOR SHORTAGE

Essen (TIS)—The gigantic development of German armaments with its accompanying improvement in related industrial branches has led to an actual shortage of skilled workers. The leading industrial sections report on unemployment amongst the iron and metal specialists and structural workers. Even Socialist workers, who were thrown out of work after Hitler's seizure of power, have been reinstated, and one case is reported. where the management of a leading factory successfully insisted on the liberation of one of their best specialist workers from a concentration camp.

The factory managements are well aware of the fact that the Socialists in most cases have not changed their views. Some of those workers have even been informed by their foremen that their attitude is of no concern to them as long as they keep silently to their work, do not engage in political activities and keep away from the Nazis.

114 GAME AND FISH ARRESTS IN DECEMBER

State game wardens haled 114 game and fish violators into Minnesota courts during the month of December, a report submitted by George Weaver, superintendent of warden service, disclosed. Fines levied amounted to $1,960 for the month.

Big game law violations headed the list with 39 arrests for infractions of the regulations relating to the protection of big game. Having guns set up in cars was the second highest in number of offenders apprehended with 21 arrests for this cause.

Wardens in making the month's arests made 99 seizures of equipment, hunting, trapping and perishable game and fish.

WATER CONSERVATION DAMS WILL IMPROVE FISH LIFE

Dams have been completed by the state division of Game and Fish at Bass lake in Itasca county and Big Thunder lake in Cass county E. W. Youngdale, division engineer, announced. Work on a dam at the outlet of Loon lake in Jackson has been started, Mr. Youngdale also reported.

Purpose of the dams, according to Mr. Youngdale, is the conservation of water and the improvement of fish lakes.

Work of making surveys in the Whitewater valley in southeastern Minnesota is being continued by the division so that improvements can be comenced early in spring.

STATE GAME WARDENS TO GO ON FULL TIME

Beginning February 1, state game wardens will go on a full time basis, Erling Swanson, director of the game and fish division announced. Owing to a lack of funds in the game and fish operating account due to marked decrease in the sale of hunting and fishing licenses and a diversion of funds for other purposes through legislative actions, game wardens were compelled to assume a five-day monthly layoff.

Director Swanson expressed his thanks for "loyalty and cooperation" of wardens during the period when finances of the division were being adjusted.

"Entered as second-class matter, April 27, 1932, at the post office at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, under Act of March 3, 1897."

It is a strange commentary on modern civilization when great educators, economists and civic leaders apply their genius not to program a plentiful supply for all, but to plan a scarcity of human necessities in order to insure profits. Planned starvation would be considered barbarous and unchristian; but planned scarcity apparently is regarded as a real achievement in human salvation from the present social, industrial and economic calamity.—Ayeffell.

THE MAD DANCE IS AT AN END

The past year has been an expensive one for Thief River Falls. Ill-considered expenditures and school boy engineering has cost the city in the neighborhood of $25,000, which is a tidy sum even for Thief River Falls. Yet if it has taught our citizens that they must keep informed on the affairs of the municipality, and if it has taught those elected to office that they cannot allow themselves to be led around by the nose by would-be political bosses it has served a good purpose.

We have no desire to "rub it in." We are glad to see some of the members of the city council break away from the Tin-Type Tammany boys and admit where they have been in error. The cost of the mistakes we must all bear in common, just as the benefits of good government wll be shared in common. Now that the evil genius is gone it should be possble for all citizens to cooperate in building a bigger and better Thief River Falls.

Indications are that the federal government will make available to municipalities large sums of money for civic improvements. Whether or not Thief River Falls uses some of these funds, we will have to help bear the costs, along with the rest of the people of the country.

Good prices on farm commodities and favorbale crops in this section has placed us in better position than the vast majority of Minnesota municipalities to take advantage of the opportunities that will be offered us. We have many unemployed and many who are only working part time and projects that will absorb them into useful employment are needed. We suggest that it is time to begin considering projects of permanent benefit to the community, as for instance sewage disposal. But we warn the powers that be, that the cards will have to be laid on the table. Back room conferences will not promote cooperation.

WHEN THE SHOE IS ON THE OTHER FOOT

During the past few years the United States has ceased to be the haven of safety for aliens who because of their radical political opinions were forced to flee their native lands. In times past we have boasted of our tolerance and of the fact that our constitution guarantees to every man a right to his own opinions, and a right to express them. But now very little more than the boast remains. Even native born citizens who have had the temerity to criticize the Powers That Be have had to look carefully into their proof of citizenship or face deportation to this place or the other. And in the red-baiting and alien deportation hysteria the Big Business press has cheered the deporters so heartily and lustily that we had almost come to believe that they and their Americanism must really be the one and only 100 per cent variety.

It is therefore a source of surprise to us to see them come so heroically to the rescue when Governor Moody of North Dakota became involved in difficulties in regard to citizenship and his qualifications to hold the office of Governor. Being a Canadian, born of a Canadian mother who later became a citizen of the United States by marrying an American, Moody's citizenship is actually in question under the laws of the land. He admits that he voted in Minneapolis less than five years ago, and must therefore either have voted there illegally or as a citizen of Minneapolis. If he was a citizen of Minneapolis less than five years ago he cannot qualify for the office of governor in North Dakota where the law specifies that five year residence is necessary to hold the office.

And so it seems that it makes a lot of difference whose calf is being butchered and the Big Business press repeat the old question, "What's the constitution among friends?" If Moody had been a Non-Partian Leaguer they would have demanded that he be deported back to Canada and he would probably have been hooked up somehow or another with Soviet Russia and an insidious plot to gain control of government in North Dakota by the Communists.

IN REGARD TO THOSE SEED POTATO PLOTS

We have a letter from Theo. Arens, the Conservator of Rural Credits stating that it appears that we have an erroneous idea about the seed potato experimental plots conducted by the Bureau during the past season. He states that the work was done thru, and under the supervision of University Farm in St. Paul and its sub-stations and in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture. He cites some results of great value to the farmers of the state. All of which we do not deny. In fact we stated in our editorial "Have the Experiment Sations Quit Business?" to which the letter is a reply, that we admitted the merit of the work undertaken by the Bureau in attempting to raise the standard of Minnesota seed potatoes.

The letter further states that the project was undertaken to assure the Bureau of the best possible seed for its farm.

We have no desire to direct unjust criticism against Mr. Arens and his department. We realize that he has a difficult task in his hands. Nevertheless, we feel constrained to point out that there are hundreds of growers thruout the Red River Valley who could have furnished the Bureau with guaranteed certified seed at a cost which would possibly have been less than the Bureau paid for its seed under the project referred to. At any rate it would have been a source of revenue to the growers without an added expense to the state.

We must repeat what we stated in the article to which Mr. Arens takes exception, that we understand the Rural Credit Bureau to be a closed institution, in process of liquidation, and as such the Conervator and his taff, in our opinion, should devote his time to quickly and economically accomplishing that aim.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

STRANGE! STRANGE!

They told us that repeal would cure all ohr ills, and now we hardly know what to think when we learn that two hundred new high-powered automobiles, bullet-proof and with machine-guns mounted inside, have been built for the United States department of justice for the special purpose of running down kidnappers and bank robbers. Our head is in a whirl! It seem to us that we have heard somewhere the prohibition responsible for kidnapers and robbers, and now that prohibition is gone, why should our officials have any more trouble along that line?.

Take It Out of The "Model T"

Dear Editor:

In a column of one of the "Scripps- McRae" papers, of earlier years, was noticed a squib in comment on the behavior of some law-making body "voting down" a measure which, had it become a law, would have been of certain benefit to the "poorer classes." The scribbler "tapered it off" with a: "Sure take it out of the scrul women"

Today, reading the "laments" about the Highway Department's lack of funds, one might similarly exclaim: "Sure, take it out of the 'Model T'!".

Washington Kaleidoscope

From Letter by
Cong. Paul John Kvale

Carrying four billion eight hundred millions in work relief and direct relief money, the administration's gigantic appropriation meaure was passed and sent to the Senate, al lin the space of two days. Faced with the double threat of revolt against the original gag which House leaders had planned to apply, the insurgents within the Democratic party, and the meeting of the House progressives from all parties secured some modification, opening the lesser important part of the measure to amendment and debate.

Angered over the leader's decision to deny any time to study receive information, discuss or offer amendments to such a vast bill, the insurgents carried their fight through the Democratic caucus and did succeed in partial modification of the rule. As a result, one significant amendment was added, but on roll call vote after a verbal spanking by one of the leaders, the House reversed itself and threw the amendment out. For the firt time in its history the House paused in the midst of its consideration of the bill to listen to a message from the Chief Executive urging adoption of the bill.

The Senate, it appears, will take more time in the study of the measure. What amendments and changes will result from that study cannot be foretold.

To make the week more eventful, the House took just one day to consider and pass a bill providing for terms governing the issue of 45,000,000,000 in government bonds. It substantially increases the present legal limit for securities, and provides for issuance of tax free "baby bonds" in small denominations.

The House leaders were successful in preventing the outbreak of a serious attack upon the tax-exempt feature of the bonds only by ruling twice that the amendments offered by Rep. Boileau, Wisconsin Progressive, eliminating the tax-free privilege, were not in order. That despite the fact that a group of Representatives has for several years been endeavoring to have that question brought up and particularly since the tremendous offerings of the present administration to meet the costs of the New Deal and the emergency expenditures which have brought relief to the unemployed and the destitute. Observers insist that had such a vote been permitted a strong majority of the House would have voted to strike the privilege.

There is some doubt regarding the ability of Congress to proceed with such program without having the question of state securities considered at the same time. But it is becoming evident that sentiment is growing to the extent that it is one of the issues which will soon be pushed into the foreground.

Another revolt was quelled when Rep. Patman of Texas made an unsuccessful effort to amend the bill so that the legal limit of bonds would depend upon the amount of money in circulation, instead of being fixed at a certain figure. The result of the amendment would have been to force more currency into circulation, this naturally having a tendency to increase commodity prices and liberalize credit facilities.

Parliamentary stategy, however, coupled with the lack of time to prepare an organized fight for amendment, resulted in defeat. And on final passage, the strong-arm methods of the leaders prevent the House from taking a record vote on the bill. It will be rushed through the Senate on the heels of the relief measure, in order that the government will be ready as soon as legislatures have taken their necessary action.

Cong. Elmer Ryan

The much discussed Farm Relief bill, H. R. 2066 of Representative Wm. Lemke, Non-Partisan of North Dakota, will probably hold the center of attention from the standpoint of agricultural legislaton. The bill provides: For refinancing of farm mortgages thru the Farm Credit Administration at 1½ per cent interest and 1½ percent annual amortized principal payments with refinancing of chattel loans at 3 per cent interest. Real estate loans are to equal the reasonable value of the land plus 75 per cent of the value of the buildings. The bill proposes that: The funds ot finance the loans are to be rated through the sale of Farm Loan Bonds bearing 1½ per cent interest if secured by real estate mortgages and 3 per cent interest if secured by chattel mortgages. The bill would make it the duty of the Federal Reserve and National Banks to invest their surplus and net profit in these bonds. In case the bonds can rot be sold, the Federal Reserve Board is to be directed to issue currency against them. Federal Reserve Notes issued in this way are not to exceed $3,000,000,000. The operation of this law is to be administered by a "Board of Agriculture" consisting of one member from each State by conventions of farm debtors. This Board is to work in cooperation with the F. C. A.

Representative Lemke has introduced another bill, H. R. 3008, proposing the establishment of a "Bank of the United States" which would supplant the Federal Reserve Board and would take over the regulation and issuance of currency.

From Federated Press
Correspondent's Report

If you are now over 70, have lived in one state at least five out of the last 10 years and have no other means of support, you may become eligible to draw a pension of $30 a month or less—half paid by the federal and half by the state government. Beginning 1940 the federally-set age will be 65, though states may set this earlier limit before that date.

If you are younger, you will have to pay for such pension as you may draw in the future. Beginning Jan. 1, 1937 your wages will be docked by one-half of 1 per cent, the percentage increasing every five years until you will be contributing 2½ per cent of your wages by 1957. Your employer will be taxed a like amount. After contributing for 200 weeks you may at the age of 65 draw a pension amounting to 15 per cent of your average monthly wage, if it is less than $150. The longer you contribute the more you will get, though for sometime the top limit will be $60 based on wages of $150 a month and contributions for 16 years.

If you are now out of work, the security program means practically nothing to you, until you get a job again. Perhaps that is why so many of the 11-15 million jobless were less interested in it than in the Lindbergh trial.

But if you have a job now, or expect to get a fairly teady one soon, you'll still have to wait a long time for the program to mean anything tangible to you. What you will get and how much you will have to pay for it will depend almost entirely upon what action your state takes. The federal government will start levying a payroll tax in 1936, but it will probably not reach its full amount of 3 per cent until 1938.

Thereafter, if your state acts along the lines suggested, you may become eligible (after being covered by contributions for a certain time to unemployment benefits after being out of a job four weeks. These will range up to 50 per cent of your wages, but not more than $15 a week and last only for a limited number of weeks.

The Man on Horseback

It was Friedrich Nietzsche who first mentioned the "man on horseback" who was to lead the world out of the trap into which it has fallen,—and since that time, most countries have produced their candidate for the position. It is too much to expect that certain Americans would not follow suit. Hence, it is easy to understand why Randolph Hearst, newspaper magnate, approached Smedley D. Butler, colorful retired leatherneck General, with the proposition that he lead a march on Washington when the Roosevelt administration fails. The General is not fooled: he sees in the proposition signs of fascism, and so far he has been anti-fascist and very pro-democratic.

He is peculiarly fitted for such a mission. Masterful, fiery, a real leader, he is impregnated with the old myths of American freedom and has those ideals to an extreme that are usually labeled "American." He would make a great ringleader of a nationalist uprising and Wall Street knows it. But one thing hinders him — he is honest.

The Vanishing President

In "The President Vanishes" seen recently at a local theatre, Butler's place was filled with the fictitious Lincoln Lee, fanatic leader of the Grey Shirts (prototype of the Blue Shirts, Brown Shirts, Silver Shirts, Black shirts, and other shirts of various hues), who had a penchant for breaking up the meetings of men with no shirts at all. In the picture the Grey Shirts were bitterly anti-Communist, pro-war, and undemocratic.

Lee was the unconscious dupe of the Fearful Five who ruled America, through their industrial setups. Hearst's synonym was plainly marked. The late Albert B. Fall was also there, as well as Dupont. They needed a war, therefore when war broke out in Europe, they tried every way to force the country into it. The newspaper man ordered the slogan "Save America's Honor!" run in two-inch type at the top of every front page in America. The people went war-mad.

But the president was against war. The plot of the story was artificial enough, with the president pulling a fake kidnaping stunt in order to make the people forget their war-hysteria, a succeeding. He tries to frame Lee by having himself brought to t Grey Shirt headquarters, bound and gagged, with the intention of being rescued later. But Lee (in the film) arrives first, and almost annihilates the presidents. The hero of our script (without which nothing that comes out of Hollywood is complete) comes in the nick of time and shoots Lee, thereby saving the president for his destiny of leading the people back to democracy.

Such pictures are the joy and despair of the social student. They show that Hollywood's America is manfully trying to face reality, but they also show that they are as truly trying to escape reality at first glimpse by hieing themselves back to the mythology of early American hitory. "The President Vanishes" depicts present-day America fairly well—the clashes with the police, anti-war demonstrations, the machinations of big business, the weak futility of idealistic blabbermouths in Congress, and interspersed throough all this, a mixture of NRAism and pay-triotism. This modern set-up is fairly clear.

But why Americans should look back with pride upon the period of negro slavery, indentured servants, imprisonment for debt, witchcraft, and all the rest, is beyond us. We have had capitalist control of our government since 1889, when Alexander Hamilton finally won the revolution. The Great Tradition is a myth, and always has been a myth, built by the masters to bend the people to their will. It has allowed the leisure class to grow larger and richer, while the lower classes have grown larger and poorer. The proportion runs in mathematical Marxian order.

There is no solution to existing reality in "The President Vanishes," but—and this is something, at least—reality is admitted.

Minute Sermons

By Dr. Crawford Grays

We have shivered at the word "radical."

We have used the calling of a man or woman "a radical" to brand them as would-be destroyers of the social and religious order.

But who is this "radical?"

By the derivation of the word itself, he is the man who goes to the root of things. He is determined to find out what ails human society and to discover the real remedy for its ills. He is the open-minded man, the man who faces up to the facts, who prizes truth above self-deception, and who when he had found it, is willing, if need be, to sacrifice position and life itself, for it.

And only as a growing number of us become "radicals" in that sense, is there any satisfaction-stabilization for either religion or society?

But the trouble with most of us is that, at heart, we are afraid.

We might be labelled "radical" or "fool." We might lose our job.

We know of injustices but they continue. Why?

The Seepage of Money and Credit

By
—Gilbert A. Brattland—

The three primal necessities of existence are food, clothing and shelter. At first each family provided these by their own ingenuity and industry. Some one developed proficiency in the hand industries and began trading with others. Specialized home industry began which developed into the factory system. Sales developed trade. Trade required financing and therefore the growth of banking and financing systems. Step by step the industrial system under which we live grew up. Gradually the factories and financing institutions were compelled to move to the more centrally located trade centers. It is only natural that they should go East where there were contacts with distributing systems, financing institutions and the foreign trade. The East gradually became the source of credit, money, services and manufactured or processed goods. The flow of money and credit from the Central West, which produced almost, or nearly so, only raw products, began.

To buy such goods or services required the exchange medium of money. To get such money, the Central West had to pledge its resources or sell its raw products to the East. As pay for such products, the producers got a cash price set by the demands of the East which had the power to set or regulate that price. When such raw products are processed or manufactured, the sale or price is then made up of the cost of the raw product, expense of handling, processing or manufacturing, transportation, financing, costs, insurance, commissions, profits, etc. At that point such processed or manufactured goods go into the sales channels on its way West with the added costs West of commissions, transportation, insurance, profits, etc., of all the mediums which handle it until it reaches the consumer. When the raw products producer in the West buys that product, he pays for it what he got originally, all the costs of processing, or manufacturing, all the commissions and profits and all the carrying costs added from the time it left his hands to the moment he buys it.

It stands to reason therefore that with his raw product price he cannot buy back all the goods which have been made from his products. He would not have money to do so. Therefore he buys back less. To the extent that he gets less profit as a producer., the less he must buy. If he produces at a loss, first he must use up his reserves in cash, when that is gone he begins to use his credit and finally when that is to the limit he pledges his property. If he then fails to pay his pledges or interest on them, he forfeits his properties and even the title has gone East.

The Years Between by Lawrence Hawthorne

Too soon they come, too soon are gone,
The years that lie between!
So swiftly twilight follows dawn
That Life's resplendent scene
Is shadowed by approaching night;
Youth finds short time for play,
And few men win ambition's fight
Before the close of day.

A babe for just a little while,
Then childhood, too, is done;
Oh, very soon is every mile
Of Life's brief journey run!
The golden years that lie between
The cradle and the cane—
Their candid record must be seen
To reckon loss or gain.

Lord, teach me how to utilize
Each precious, fleeting year,
Nor let me waste so rich a prize
As youth! I have no fear
Of memories when I am old
If I have done my best,
For evening shadows then will hold
Contentment, peace and rest.

READY FOR THE PWA
(St. Paul Daily News)

Every citizen owes it to himself to watch closely the development of the coming plan for public works which we are assured will replace direct relief for the ablebodied this winter and spring.

Entirely regardless of whether you approve of this plan or not, if it goes into effect, it can be made to yield maximum benefits to those local communities which are ready for it.

More than a year has passed since the civil works administration was projected. The CWA came on us unannounced, and found many communities unprepared. They were unable to produce at short notice public work of really permanent value.

The incidents of raking leaves in parks and digging up pavements to relay them again in the same spot were largely the fault of local communities.

This time there is no excuse. Communities should know and have plans for public work that will be of permanent value, now and forever into the future.

LET'S BUILD ROADS AND EMPLOY MEN
(Fairmont Sentinel)

To the Minnesota Legislature:

Don't be foolish and cut the automobile licenses again. Let the restored rates alone and provide work on the highways next summer.

It is politics pure and simple to knock $5 off the cost of a license and call it reducing taxes, while at the same time such action means discontinuance of paving, and lack of jobs for deserving citizens.

Anybody who drives an automobile can spare $5 to bring about employment of workmen and improvements of the highway system. Hundreds of automobile owners already are purchasing their 1935 plates, and not one in 25 kicks on the price. In fact, a good many express the belief that it is wiser to pay a $5 higher minimum for licenses than to be taxed probably a good deal more than that for relief expenditures.

A car driven on good cement paving instead of mud, dirt or gravel will save more than $5 a year on upkeep.

An automobile license that entitles one to drive for a full year over Minnesota highways is the cheapest thing anybody ever bought for $12.50. Cutting it to $7.50 doesn't mean a thing except fewer good roads.

With a $12.50 minimum, Minnesota automobile taxes are among the lowest in the country, as no other taxes on cars or trucks are collected here. In some states both a license and personal property tax is levied.

DEMOCRATS TO PAY DUES
(Farmer-Labor Leader)

Do our eyes deceive us? Do we read aright an announcement that a Democratic Union of Minnesota "modeled after the Farmer-Labor Association" has been launched? Why, it was only day before yesterday that old-party politicians told us that the Farmer-Labor Association plan of organization was iniquitous and its dues-paying feature illegal.

Yet the guiding powers of this move, Fred Schiplin among them, are now quoted as assuring their people that a duespaying membership fashioned along Farmer-Labor Association lines will "unite all on a permanent basis, stop party splits, prevent 'selling out' the party, and enable it to set to work on the campaign of 1936."

So all those speeches about the big, bad Farmer-Labor Association and its terrible dues-paying memberhip were just plain campaign ballyhoo Well, they didn't fool anybody. Maybe this new dodge will. Evidently the promoters think it worth trying. Ho, hum!

FARM PEONAGE
(St. Paul Daily News)

From Lincoln, Ill., comes an interesting and significant item of news.

It tells of the abatement of more than $250,000 in rent to 1,176 farmers of the 217,000 acres of the Scully estates in Illinois, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska. Thomas and Frederick Sculy, the owners, abated the rents because of damage done crops last year by the drouth and bugs.

Further details were lacking but it is to be presumed that the abatement was not in any altruistic spirit—probably the Sculys found themselves like many a smaller farm owner, with tenants who simply couldn't pay the rent. And so the made, perhaps, a virtue of necessity.

But the significant part of the story lies in the public revelation that two men have secured ownership of 217,000 acres of land being farmed by 1,176 tenants.

Those who cherish still the idea of the independent American farmer owning and tilling his own acres will look at this picture with misgiving. The same gobbling of smaller industrial and manufacturing units by larger ones seems to be going on in agriculture.

One of these days all the worthwhile farms will be owned by comparatively few landlords and the American farmer as an independent producer will cease to be. He will become a tenant and be but one step removed from a peon—that is, unless something happens before then to halt this absorption of the small by the large.

NO REASON TO DELAY BONUS
(Minneapolis Labor Review)

It is difficult to understand how President Roosevelt can oppose paying the bonus to ex-service men. There is but one group to gain advantage from this and that is the bankers and the great exploiters.

How shall a nation deny those who offered their lives a few dollars apiece in light of the fact that the Duponts made profits of 39,000 per cent out of the war.

These men for whom the bonus is sought offered their lives to their country when the nation needed them most. They cut the bonds of home and family and love without quibbling or question.

Now these men need that money the bonus will afford just as badly or worse than the nation needed their services during the war.

It appears that President Roosevelt would take the word gratitude out of the lexicon of patriotism if he is to continue his opposition and veto the bonus.

There is no logical reason why the bonus should not be paid and paid immediately.

FARM and MARKET

BY
R. A. Trovatten, Minnesota
Commissioner of Agriculture
Dairy and Food

The nation-wide wave for rural electrification picked up considerable momentum during the past few weeks. The Mississippi Valley Commission went on record for the approval of an elaborate plan of combined federal, state and private action for rural power and light. Governor Olson, in his inaugural address, asked that the Legislature consider rural electrification to be developed along with federal aid through a system of municipally owned plants.

—o—

Emphasizing that only 5 per cent of Minnesota's farms are connected with a central power house as compared with 11.3 per cent for the nation as a whole, the Governor pointed out that there exists an urgent matter for law-making bodies. In some of our eastern states the percentage is much higher—50 to 60 per cent, which ranks closer to the number of powerand light equipped farms in some European countries. These figures of course do not include individual lighting plants, of which there are a great number.

It has been stressed in this column that the power companies are to be blamed for the backwardness of rural electrification. In order that the numerous high salaries of officials and dividends of water stock be met, the power companies have avoided rural sections where the population is not thickly settled. In this respect they permitted individual lighting plant concerns ot operate unhampered, which is quite the opposite when the small plant sellers invade what they term their side of the street—clubs, factories, villages, and towns desirous of purchasing power plants. In that case the opposition is terrific which makes us sometimes wonder whether the power companies are really interested in rendering a service to the people.

Now that rural electrification looks inevitable, the power companies are trying to get on the band wagon. They are in favor of extending the lines now that government aid is coming forth. However, most of the plans presented indicate that the people will reign, that the government, either state or federal, will retain control.

THE READER'S ROSTRUM

NEED OF COOPERATION

It looks as though we are on the eve of a great American Co-operative Commonwealth.

A great majority of the people agree that a change in our economic and social structure is inevitable. With that in mind, the question arises, "What can be done?"

Numerous propositions have been put forth, more and newer ones are budding, coming on the air and through the press. But still it seems very little progress is made in solving the problem.

Co-operation is the answer. Beginning in a small community, one finds that little progress can be made without co-operation. Who would want to live in a neighborhood where there is no co-operation? Churches are built co-operatively. In time of need, the co-operation of friends to help is gratifying. Many small items of co-operation are ? experienced first by one, then another, and taken as a matter of course. Such a co-operation is a necessity to human beings.

What co-operation is doing in community affairs it will do in County, State and National affairs. So it is up to each one of us to get behind the co-operative movement. To do this the co-operative movement must be understood thoroughly.

Remember the words of Lincoln—

"United we stand, divided we fall."

—A Co-operator.

Farmers Must Help Control Credit, Says Gov. Wm. I. Myers

St. Paul, Jan. 29—Farmers' share in controlling and in supplying the credit they need in their undertakings is essential to the building of a permanent system of cooperative credit, Dr. Wm. I. Myers, governor of the Farm Credit Administration, said while on a visit to the Twin Cities a few days ago. He declared his belief that farmers do not want "subsidized" credit permanently.

"I am convinced," said the chief of all the land banks and other units of the farm credit set-up, "that a permanent system of cooperative credit can not be built unless the farmers share in furnishing the capital and share increasingly in the control and ownership of the credit institutions. Every industry should be able to stand on its own feet on terms of equality with other industries.

"In the future farmers are determined to get a fair compensatory return for farm products and if they do obtain reasonable prices there is no need for subsidiary credit. If agriculture does not get a compensatory price for farm products, a government subsidy with reduction in interest rates will not save the situation."

As to the farmer's own views on this question, the governor said: "I believe that farmers generally feel that the cooperative principal of farm financing is sound. We should see to it that our credit structures are correctly built on this principle. Our new credit cooperatives have made excellent progress in carrying out this principle."

Governor Myers also declared that no plan of financing agriculture would be complete without facilities for cooperative marketing and purchasing associations. He showed how the new banks for cooperatives are organized on a decentralized plan in contrast with the plan formerly in vogue under the old farm board.

During its first year the St. Paul Bank for Cooperatives approved loans of over $1,212,000 to cooperatives in Minnesota, many of them purchasing cooperatives.

NAZISM BRINGS CHILD LABOR BACK TO GERMANY

Berlin (TIS)—Child labor is again on the upgrade in Nazi Germany.

Having destroyed the powerful free trade unions, which were the leading forces against child labor, the Nazi authorities are now incorporating regulations concerning child labor into new labor collective contracts drawn up under the authority of the regional trustees of labor. Thus, the new collective labor contract for the East Prussian agriculture, dated october 26 1934 contains a special paragraph on child labor which reads "Labor contracts with children unded the age of ten are void. Labor contracts with children of ten or over need the consent of the parents. The children's working hours must be arranged in such a way as not to interfere with their school attendance, nor their activities in the Hitler Youth Movement or the League of German Girls. Daily wages for children are 50 pfenning to one mark, according to their to the efficiency." It is interesting to note that the Nazis insisted until recently that no child under the age of 14 should be allowed to work.

Goodland Colonists Are Absorbed In Their Task

Heads of 20 Minneapolis families, the advance guard for the colonists on a cooperative farm in Itasca county, have tackled their job in earnest. They will live this winter in a re-modeled log cabin, while preparing adequate quarters for their families who will join them in the spring.

Purchases have been made of tools and implements, a second hand sawmill and a steam tractor. When the mill has been erected, the tractor furnishing the motive power, the men will start sawing out lumber for their permanent homes.

The sawmill is part of the equipment for a small box factory, with which the cooperators hope to earn income to repay the $22,000 assigned for the project by the SERA rural rehabilitation division. Approximately $9,000 of this sum was used to purchase 620 acres of land for the colony. The balance will buy building material and livestock.

All work will be done on a basis of mutuality. In the crowd are poultry-raisers, dairymen, farmers and representatives of various crafts.

Lake Surveys To Save Fish Life

Surveys of Minnesota's lakes where there is any indication that fish life will be smothered out during the winter months is bein ducted by the Division of Sanitation of the Department of Health in cooperation with the Division of Game and Fish of the Department of Conservation. Most of this work is being confined to southern Minnesota lakes where water levels are abnormally low.

Oxygen content of the lake waters is being determined in the survey. Where it is found that fish life is threatened, the Game and Fish Division either mechanically aerates the water or the fish is removed. In the latter instance, game fishes are transferred to deeper lakes and rough fish is sold or held for sale depending upon market conditions.

The work is being supervised by George Weaver, in charge of fish lakes improvement for the Game and Fish Division.

LABOR CHEST CAMPAIGN PROMISES TO BE SUCCESS

New York, (TIS) — American labor's fund-raising and organizational campaign in behalf of the tional campaign in behalf of the Facist oppressed workers of Europe is proceeding successfully, according to word from New York headquarters of the "Labor Chest for the Liberation of Workers of Europe," organized at the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor at San Francisco.

The New York branches of the Workmen's Circle, a powerful Jewish labor and fraternal organization, have decided to raise a fund of $15,000. A special Labor Chest Commttee has been set up to cooperate extensively with the national organization of the Labor Chest. Labor's call for support has also been met with considerable enthusiasm on the part of the Painters and Decorators of New York, organized in the Painters District Council Number 9. A quota of $5,000, of which a large part has already been raised, was decided upon. Other labor unions have decided to organize similar fund-raising Labor Chest Committees. The Forward Association, publisher of the Jewish Daily Forward, voted at their last business meeting an amount of $2,500 for these purposes. This is only one of the many contributions which the famous Jewish Labor paper has given in recent years to the cause of oppressed labor in Europe.

The Apples On Your Pantry Shelf

NORTHERN Spy, Golden Russet, Streaked Pippin, Maidens Blush, Lady Sweet, Newtown Pippin—the very names suggest untold joys to the great American apple munching public. And to those of us who live, or ever have lived, beyond the city limits, they conjure up visions of orchards, from the ripening of the first Red Astrakan in June, to the dropping of the last Baldwin or Winesap, on the very edge of winter.

If we could only store them all on our pantry shelves, in all their colorful variety, we could keep the family happy, meal on end, with their favorite fruit. But, apples being the perishable and bulky things they are, and pantry space being so limited, it just can't be done.

Quality and Convenience

That doesn't mean, though, that we have to be deprived of apples any time we want them, for again our good old friend the tin can comes to the rescue of the housewife and you can have the most delicious apples you can imagine all year round, in any form you wish, baked, as apple butter or apple sauce. More than that, you can be perfectly sure that there will be no imperfections to be cut out, because these apples selected for canning are picked at the very peak of their goodness when flesh and flavor are just right, and they are sealed in their cans so quickly that they retain more of their vitamins than do apples held in storage.

As a matter of fact, aside from the natural appeal of a "nice red apple" (or a greening or a russet, if your particular yen is for those) one need never have a raw apple around, because those in cans give you more than the raw ones do—the more being their assured quality and the greater convenience in cooking.

The canners have even remembered the housewife's liking for attractive shelves, and, wise people that they are, they have given their cans "eye appeal" through the use of true color labels that reproduce the fruit exactly.

Discussing the merits of raw and canned fruits, for children's use, and of apples in particular, since the apple season was just at its height, one mother of four whose budget, even in these times, permits her to have the best of everything, said that although she encouraged them to eat all the good fresh fruit they wish, they seem to prefer canned apple sauce and apple butter and desserts made from them.

Some Good Apple Recipes

And that naturally suggests ways and means of using apples from the cans. It saves so much time and effort, and you don't have to worry about quality and flavor. Here are some recipes for delicious apple foods that your family will be sure to like.

Apple and Cream Cheese Pie: Season one No. 2 can of apple sauce with one-fourth teaspoon cloves and pour into a crust. Dot with one tablespoon of butter and bake at 450 degrees for ten minutes, then reduce to 350 degrees for twenty minutes. Cool. Beat three-fourths cup of cream, add one cream cheese which has been forced through a sieve and pile on the pie, which should be cold.

Cake and Biscuits

Apple Sauce Loaf Cake: Cream one-third cup of butter and one cup of sugar. Add one teaspoon soda to one and one-quarter cups canned apple sauce (one 11-ounce can) and add to creamed mixture. Sift together two cups flour, one teaspoon baking powder, a few grains salt, one-half teaspoon clove, one-half teaspoon allspice and one-fourth teaspoon nutmeg, and add, together with the grated rind of one lemon. Add one-half cup of raisins and one-half cup nuts. (Reserve a little of the flour to sift over them). Bake in a loaf in a 350 degree oven for from forty-five to sixty minutes.

Apple Sauce Biscuits: Mix and sift two cups of flour, four teaspoons baking powder, one-half teaspoon soda and one teaspoon salt. Cut in three tablespoons of shortening and add one beaten egg, one-half cup canned apple sauce and one-fourth cup of thick sour cream, mixed together. Put out on a floured board, cut into small biscuits and place in pans. Sprinkle with grated cheese, and bake in a hot oven—450 degrees—for ten to twelve minutes. This makes about sixteen medium sized biscuits.*

Creamery Stockholders Issue A Statement

$550.00, our old creamery plant, (valued the year before at $10,059.85), and in their report said that by this sale we made a profit of $19.41!

"In the deed, they reserved to us the old creamery well, from which we had always got our water free; but the Land O'Lakes promptly built a garage over it, and since then we have been buying our water from the Land O'Lake at a cost each year, of almost as much as they paid us for the whole property,—a total of many times that price.

"The Annual Statement of our creamery for 1931, issued by our board, shows our net worth to be $51,008.94 after taking out a stated depreciation of $24,600.94, and that net worth includes our creamery plant valued at $50,467.01, and the two residences at $4,257.51.

"But from that time on, our books were audited each year and our statement prepared by "Co-operative Auditing Service, Land O' Lakes Creameries," and the values of our properties began to strangely fall.

"It was a convenient drop for the Land O' Lakes, because when they want more of our property they seem to be able to get it for next to nothing.

"In the 1932 report, the net value of our cre mery building drops to $39,268.73, and of our two residence properties to $2200.60.

"Quite a drop in one year, when the Land O'Lakes begins to covet it. All you need do is to convince these farmers their property is worthless and you are doing them a favor to take it off their hads.

"Well, what happens? Why the Land O'Lakes wants these two residence we own, to build an oil station on, and make more money, So, in 1933, our good-hearted creamery board, sells the Land O'Lakes our two residense properties, for $2500.00; (valued in 1931, two years before, at $4257.51).

"Good work, creamery board! At this rate you are sure to save our farmers money because they soon won't have any property left to spend money on.

"It is true that for this sale a special stockholders meeting was held with only a few present, and a hands-up vote taken in a hurry. Who knows whether some voted two hands instead of one.

"The 1926 report shows that this property cost the creamery association, $6622,92, yet the 1933 annual report states that its sale for $2500.00 made a profit on the sale, of $166.70. What masters of figures these accountants are. They can take your money away from you, and prove beyond a doubt that you are better off without it.

"But the best stroke of all remains to be told, the property and our well. We've lost

"We've lost our old creamery our two valuable residences with their lots in the midst of a growing city. But we still have our shirts, and our new, fine 2-story and basement creamery building, into the making of which has gone every quart of milk you squeezed from your cows, every day and night of hard work and unending effort you have put in for ten years.

"You are facing a prosperous future, with the price of butter-fat gone up, and the ending of the depression in sight.

"But the Land O'Lakes, not satisfied with all they already have procured from you wants your last good building.

"What happens?

"In the 1933 report of your board prepared by the "Co-operative Auditing Service, Land O' Lakes Creameries,"—your values go down with a thud. You are told that the net value of your new creamery building has fallen to $29,565.53, although but one year before, in 1931, reported the net value at $39,268.73; and two years before, in 1931, the value was reported at $50.467.01.

"And the land on which it stands drops from $1200.00 in 1932, to $900. in 1933.

"How do you account for this loss in value of nearly ten thousand dollars in a single year?

"Is it because somebody is planning to get your property for nothing and trying to convince you that they are doing you a favor by taking it off your hands?

"Well, the Land O'Lakes seem so sure they are going to get it away from you cheap, that one of their officials appeared before the City Council at the Equalization Meeting demanding reduction of the assessed valuation of OUR creamery building because they could buy it for less; and this incident occurred before the first stockholders meeting held in July 1934, at which you were given a chance to vote on the proposed sale to them.

"What foresight they possess. They know before you do, just what is going to happen to you. They plan while you sleep,—and apparently somebody has put your creamery board to sleep. Every figure given above has been taken from the annual reports of your board. There are none so blind as those who will not see. If you have any doubts, look up your creamery reports yourself.

"Late in June, 1934, a notice calling a special stockholders meeting to be held at the City Auditorium, July 66th, at 1 p. m. was received by some stockholders, the purpose of the meeting being omitted from the notice for some reason. Out of possible curiosity, 70 of the 153 stockholders were present at the meeting. What was it all about? It began to dawn on some of us it was something extraordinary, for there was President Brant himself, the Vice-president, the auditor, the fieldman, and lesser fry of the local Land O' Lakes plant. They fed us fine speeches, spoke of other smaller creameries connected with he Land O'Lakes that were paying from 1.5c to 1.9c per pound more, and if we got into a small one story building, we should obtain the same results; but they did forget to tell us what creameries independent of the Land O'Lakes are doing,—like the Sebeka, Fergus Falls, and Pelican Rapids creameries, that are paying from 3c to 6c more than any Land O' Lakes creameries in the State.

"Mr. Brandt gave a more general talk, outlining first, Proposal No. 1. The Land O'Lakes, Inc. would pay us $20,000. for our present building and site, we to assume our present liability,—that is, we to pay the debt on the building we sold them, so that according to the 1933 report, taking out our investment in the Land O'Lakes of $3090.03 we would owe $4709.97, and receive net for our building and ground,—$15,290.03,—That for our $50,000.00 property.

"And with all our $20,967.43 worth of machinery and equipment inside. Well, well, if they could get our property from us as easy and cheap as that by spending a few fine words, what fools bank robbers are.

"Although very bad, this proposal was the best of the two offered. It was at least definite, and we would know that though we were going to lose our shirts, we'd still have our pants left. After paying our debts and estimated cost of moving and installing our machinery, we might have $9000 left to build a creamery.

"Proposal No. 2,—the horse-trade. Shut your eyes and each hand the other anything you please. The biggest crook wins. We had the worst of this because they knew what building we had, but we don't know yet what they planned to give us.

"We were to give them our property debt-free, and in return, in vague terms, they proposed to buy us three lots, drill a well, and build us a one-story, no basement, 44 by 84 feet with a mortgage on it of $1100.00.

"Some other statements were made, but it is doubtful if they were even to put on a roof, other than the mortgage and we could move in and lock as if we liked it.

"Several members of our board awoke to the situation and spoke their little pieces in favor of Proposal No. 2, and it was adopted, and a second stockholders meeting was called and held in August, to assure the Land O'Lakes their ears did not deceive them, and that they were going to get our magnificent and expensive property for a song.

"Mr. Brandt was so enthusiastic, he told us how well quarified the Land O' Lakes was, with their great efficiency, credit, and purchasing power, to give us a wonderful building, with all the trimming.

"Well, there's no doubt we'll get the trimming.

"Now, 1934, has passed. A few of the faithful of us, who at least have our eyes open and refuse to be hypnotized, or have a deal of this kind shoved down our throats like bad medicine, without making a kick,—have caused the horse-trade to be held up by court proceedings,—and for this, and because we are trying to save the property of our creamery association, we have been abused and threatened and publicly blamed.

"We do not believe that our creamery that has been built up by the sweat and the blood of our stockholders, by the hard work and never ceasing efforts of our patrons, should be hung to the tail of the Land O' Lakes cow, and switched around, gradually losing every piece of our property, and and every dollar of our earnings, until with one final crack of the whip-like tail, we'll be deposited in the weeds by the roadside, stripped of our property, our money, and the business of our creamery."

Young Churchmen Declare for Cooperative Commonwealth

The second annual conference of the Younger Churchmen of the South met at Chattanooga, Tenn., early in December with delegates present from Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia, and Arkanas, representing Episcopalians, Unitarians, Congregationalists, Methodists and Presbyterians. The resolutions were of no mild character, recommending as they did the complete abolition of the capitalist system and pledging the delegates to work for a "genuinely cooperative social economy democratically planned to adjust production to consumption requirements, eliminate private ownership of the means of production and distribution wherever such ownership interferes with the social good." Among the speakers were Francis Henson, general secretary of the International Student Service; Fred Held, vice-preident of the American federation of hosiery workers; Frank Ward, secretary of the same organization and Rev. Claude C. Williams, Presbyterian minister who was ousted from his Presbyterian church in Paris, Ark., last summer for attempting to establish a workers church. Mr. Henson had been in Europe during the summer and came home convinced that all capitalistic countries in danger of a proletarian revolution would see the rise of facist movements as the last attempt to save capitalism. He urged a strong fight now against facism instead of waiting until it became powerful. George Streator, former associate editor of the Crises, compared the South with Germany: just as the German barons fastened the blame for the breakdown of their country on the Jews, so the southern barons would try to fasten the blame on the Negroes.

Let Our Motto Be
GOOD HEALTH

Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

HEALTH HEARTS FOR YOUNGSTERS

THE deaths from heart disease during childhood can be divided into two groups. During the first year of life they are usually the result of a congenitally deformed heart. There is a structural deformity in the heart and these babies do not live until their first birthday. Nothing can be done to help them.

After the first year the heart diseases are due to bacterial invasions of the heart and can be thought of as direct heart poisoning. The deaths from this cause begin to be more frequent after the first three years of life. This period, up to puberty, is the time when the infectious diseases, such as diphtheria, scarlet fever, and measles are most prevalent. This is also the period in which children have frequent head colds and sore throats.

The tonsils and adenoids are accumulations of lymph tissue at the back of the nose and in the throat. The bacteria growing in the nose and throat during head colds and sore throats become lodged in the adenoids and tonsils. This causes an enlargement of these lymph glands and the enlarged adenoids lead to the typical mouth breather because they close up the back part of the nose and make breathing through the mouth easier than through the nose. After the head cold or sore throat disappears, we can still oftentimes find numerous disease-producing bacteria in the enlarged tonsils and adenoids. Many of these bacteria belong to the group of germs called streptococci. One of the main reasons why physicians recommend the removal of enlarged tonsils is because they contain bacteria that are very harmful to the individual.

Infectious heart disease is due to an infection of the heart by bacteria. These bacteria usually pass from the nose and throat into the body and lodge in the heart. Rheumatic fever belongs to this group of heart diseases. Joint pains, muscle pains, chorea or St. Vitus dance, are all part of a rheumatic fever picture. Severe sore throat with fever, followed by enlargement of the glands in the side of the neck are indications of infection of the throat with a group of bacteria capable of causing heart disease under certain conditions.

Young children with heart disease need absolute rest in bed until the acute symptoms subside. This is difficult to do because these children are not in pain and naturally want to play. But they become easily exhausted and the heart condition may become gradually worse until permanent damage is done. Many of the deaths from heart disease in the first decade of life are due to neglected cases of rheumatic fever with cardiac complications.

Heart disease sometimes follows diphtheria, scarlet fever and measles. Kidney trouble also follows these infectious diseases at times and is due to the same group of bacteria that cause cardiac damage. After a child recovers from any of the infectious diseases, the heart is sometimes weak for a few months but careful supervision will lead to recovery. In these instances the weakness is due to toxins poisoning the heart during the attack of the disease. If the heart is allowed to rest, little damage will result and the child will not be handicapped in future life by a weak heart.

The heart is made up of a network of muscle fibers that are joined to each other. These muscles contract about 72 times per minute, and they rest between each contraction. Thus they have a definite period of work and a definite period of rest. During fever, due to diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles and sore throat, the heart beats faster than normal and hence the resting period between each beat is shortened. This causes an exhaustion of muscle fibers. It is just the same as if you worked 20 hours a day with only 2 or 3 hours rest.

After any illness associated with high temperature and fast heart rate, the heart should be examined to see that it has fully recovered from the strain. The child should not return to school the day after a spell of fever but should be kept in bed for a few days to allow the heart to rest.

It is very difficult to cure heart disease. It is much easier to prevent it and the prevention should start early in life. The first ten years is not too early to begin to take measures to insure a healthy, normal heart that will perform its functions properly for the next six or seven decades. A heart damaged during the first decade may lead to semi-invalidism during the fourth or fifth decades of life.

The Apples On Your Pantry Shelf

NORTHERN Spy, Golden Russet, Streaked Pippin, Maidens Blush, Lady Sweet, Newtown Pippin—the very names suggest untold joys to the great American apple munching public. And to those of us who live, or ever have lived, beyond the city limits, they conjure up visions of orchards, from the ripening of the first Red Astrakan in June, to the dropping of the last Baldwin or Winesap, on the very edge of winter.

If we could only store them all on our pantry shelves, in all their colorful variety, we could keep the family happy, meal on end, with their favorite fruit. But, apples being the perishable and bulky things they are, and pantry space being so limited, it just can't be done.

Quality and Convenience

That doesn't mean, though, that we have to be deprived of apples any time we want them, for again our good old friend the tin can comes to the rescue of the housewife and you can have the most delicious apples you can imagine all year round, in any form you wish, baked, as apple butter or apple sauce. More than that, you can be perfectly sure that there will be no imperfections to be cut out, because these apples selected for canning are picked at the very peak of their goodness when flesh and flavor are just right, and they are sealed in their cans so quickly that they retain more of their vitamins than do apples held in storage.

As a matter of fact, aside from the natural appeal of a "nice red apple" (or a greening or a russet, if your particular yen is for those) one need never have a raw apple around, because those in cans give you more than the raw ones do—the more being their assured quality and the greater convenience in cooking.

The canners have even remembered the housewife's liking for attractive shelves, and, wise people that they are, they have given their cans "eye appeal" through the use of true color labels that reproduce the fruit exactly.

Discussing the merits of raw and canned fruits, for children's use, and of apples in particular, since the apple season was just at its height, one mother of four whose budget, even in these times, permits her to have the best of everything, said that although she encouraged them to eat all the good fresh fruit they wish, they seem to prefer canned apple sauce and apple butter and desserts made from them.

Some Good Apple Recipes

And that naturally suggests ways and means of using apples from the cans. It saves so much time and effort, and you don't have to worry about quality and flavor. Here are some recipes for delicious apple foods that your family will be sure to like.

Apple and Cream Cheese Pie: Season one No. 2 can of apple sauce with one-fourth teaspoon cloves and pour into a crust. Dot with one tablespoon of butter and bake at 450 degrees for ten minutes, then reduce to 350 degrees for twenty minutes. Cool. Beat three-fourths cup of cream, add one cream cheese which has been forced through a sieve and pile on the pie, which should be cold.

Cake and Biscuits

Apple Sauce Loaf Cake: Cream one-third cup of butter and one cup of sugar. Add one teaspoon soda to one and one-quarter cups canned apple sauce (one 11-ounce can) and add to creamed mixture. Sift together two cups flour, one teaspoon baking powder, a few grains salt, one-half teaspoon clove, one-half teaspoon allspice and one-fourth teaspoon nutmeg, and add, together with the grated rind of one lemon. Add one-half cup of raisins and one-half cup nuts. (Reserve a little of the flour to sift over them). Bake in a loaf in a 350 degree oven for from forty-five to sixty minutes.

Apple Sauce Biscuits: Mix and sift two cups of flour, four teaspoons baking powder, one-half teaspoon soda and one teaspoon salt. Cut in three tablespoons of shortening and add one beaten egg, one-half cup canned apple sauce and one-fourth cup of thick sour cream, mixed together. Put out on a floured board, cut into small biscuits and place in pans. Sprinkle with grated cheese, and bake in a hot oven—450 degrees—for ten to twelve minutes. This makes about sixteen medium sized biscuits.*

$550.00, our old creamery plant, (valued the year before at $10,059.85), and in their report said that by this sale we made a profit of $19.41!

"In the deed, they reserved to us the old creamery well, from which we had always got our water free; but the Land O'Lakes promptly built a garage over it, and since then we have been buying our water from the Land O'Lake at a cost each year, of almost as much as they paid us for the whole property,—a total of many times that price.

"The Annual Statement of our creamery for 1931, issued by our board, shows our net worth to be $51,008.94 after taking out a stated depreciation of $24,600.94, and that net worth includes our creamery plant valued at $50,467.01, and the two residences at $4,257.51.

"But from that time on, our books were audited each year and our statement prepared by "Cooperative Auditing Service, Land O' Lakes Creameries," and the values of our properties began to strangely fall.

"It was a convenient drop for the Land O' Lakes, because when they want more of our property they seem to be able to get it for next to nothing.

"In the 1932 report, the net value of our creamery building drops to $39,268.73, and of our two residence properties to $2200.60.

"Quite a drop in one year, when the Land O'Lakes begins to covet it. All you need do is to convince these farmers their property is worthless and you are doing them a favor to take it off their hads.

"Well, what happens? Why the Land O'Lakes wants these two residence we own, to build an oil station on, and make more money, So, in 1933, our good-hearted creamery board, sells the Land O'Lakes our two residense properties, for $2500.00; (valued in 1931, two years before, at $4257.51).

"Good work, creamery board! At this rate you are sure to save our farmers money because they soon won't have any property left to spend money on.

"It is true that for this sale a special stockholders meeting was held with only a few present, and a hands-up vote taken in a hurry. Who knows whether some voted two hands instead of one.

"The 1926 report shows that this property cost the creamery association, $6622,92, yet the 1933 annual report states that its sale for $2500.00 made a profit on the sale, of $166.70. What masters of figures these accountants are They can take your money away from you, and prove beyond a doubt that you are better off without it.

"But the best stroke of all remains to be told, , property and our well. We've lost

"We've lost our old creamery our two valuable residences with their lots in the midst of a growing city. But we still have our shirts, and our new, fine 2-story and basement creamery building, into the making of which has gone every quart of milk you squeezed from your cows, every day and night of hard work and unending effort you have put in for ten years.

"You are facing a prosperous future, with the price of butter-fat gone up, and the ending of the depression in sight.

"But the Land O'Lakes, not satisfied with all they already have procured from you wants your last good building.

"What happens?

"In the 1933 report of your board prepared by the "Co-operative Auditing Service, Land O' Lakes Creameries,"—your values go down with a thud. You are told that the net value of your new creamery building has fallen to $29,565.53, although but one year before, in 1931, reported the net value at $39,268.73; and two years before, in 1931, the value was reported at $50,467.01.

"And the land on which it stands drops from $1200.00 in 1932, to $900. in 1933.

"How do you account for this loss in value of nearly ten thousand dollars in a single year?

"Is it because somebody is planning to get your property for nothing and trying to convince you that they are doing you a favor by taking it off your hands?

"Well, the Land O'Lakes seem so sure they are going to get it away from you cheap, that one of their officials appeared before the City Council at the Equalization Meeting demanding reduction of the assessed valuation of OUR creamery building because they could buy it for less; and this incident occurred before the first stockholders meeting held in July 1934, at which you were given a chance to vote on the proposed sale to them.

"What foresight they possess. They know before you do, just what is going to happen to you. They plan while you sleep,—and apparently somebody has put your creamery board to sleep. Every figure given above has been taken from the annual reports of your board. There are none so blind as those who will not see. If you have any doubts, look up your creamery reports yourself.

"Late in June, 1934, a notice calling a special stockholders meeting to be held at the City Auditorium, July 66th, at 1 p. m. was received by some stockholders, the purpose of the meeting being omitted from the notice for some reason. Out of possible curiosity, 70 of the 153 stockholders were present at the meeting. What was it all about? It began to dawn on some of us it was something extraordinary, for there was President Brant himself, the Vice president, the auditor, the fieldman, and lesser fry of the local Land O' Lakes plant. LONG AUTOMOBILE TRIPS

THE automobile tourist is very apt to abuse two very important parts of his body his skin and his digestive tract And then he complains that he did not get much good out of his trip

Well why should he? You can't insult and mistreat these two organs without having them slap back and slap back immediately. And trouble with both of them can very easily be avoided.

There are of course not so many cases of sunburn in the late fall as in the early summer, as most persons have secured a moderate amount of suntan during the summer and hence have a corresponding adaptability. But still a great many fall vacationers become too enthusiastic over sunshine, particularly when they reach a body of water with a good swimming beach.

Sunburn is not only painful, but in the process of acquiring it, the whole chemistry and metabolism of the body gets an upset. Diarrhea may very well be a consequence, with the thirst that accompanies it. If the person is able to travel the next day, he will want to stop and drink from every well and pump he sees. Some of the water may be bad and dysentery or typhoid may be the result.

But much more frequently than sunburn, it is wrong eating and overtiredness that upsets the regular rhythm of the body functions. The automobilists start out extra early, perhaps; they may get a breakfast of toast and bad coffee at some place that should never have gone into the business of serving food. About noon they decide they will stop and eat at the next town; when they come to it, they decide no place is inviting, and they drive on. At the next place it is the same, and maybe at three o'clock or so, some one rebels and says, they must stop at the very next place food is to be had, no matter how it looks. Perhaps this turns out to be a crossroads grocery, and the only thing available is an ice cream cone or a chocolate bar and a packaged sweet roll. In the evening no place looks good, either, and at nine or ten, when they stop for the night, they find that the restaurants that served a good meal had closed at eight o'clock. Next day there may be a repetition of the same eating system, or lack of system. Some few individuals have digestive tracts that can stand that sort of treatment, but most of us haven't.

In the research laboratories of the University of Illinois, we have found that when people have become fatigued and overheated they lose the power of secreting acid in their stomachs. Now the normal digestive tract can and does destroy a great many outside germs without trouble. But when it has become abnormal, as it is in this period of absence of normal stomach acidity, then swallowed germs can multiply to a great extent.

There are several ways of avoiding digestive disturbances on an automobile trip. One is the common sense one of making it your business to eat as regularly as you do at home. You watch out for the oil and gas in your car; why not have equal regard for the machinery of your body? Inquire when you start out in the morning about the restaurants in the towns along the way, and then decide on one place for the noon meal and another for the evening meal. If your itinerary can't compass an eating place at noon, then have a box luncheon of sandwiches and fruit put up, with a bottle of pasteurized milk and eat that at your regular noon lunch hour. Then get a meal that includes vegetables and meat or fish at night. Another way is the method the Romans, led by the Caesars, used when they campaigned from northern Europe to equatorial Asia and Africa; and a method the missionaries use in cholera-infested India. And that is to add an acid to the drinking water.

But if you are not absolutely certain that the drinking water has been adjudged safe by the state health department, then by all means be sure that it is boiled before you drink it. You may save yourself dysentery or typhoid by so doing. Or get standard brands of mineral and other bottled waters. If you are camping out and the water is suspicious and of unknown source, then add hypochlorite tablets to the water for washing your hands and face, and for washing food and dishes. The druggist will give you directions for using the tablets. Or boil the cleansing water. Never use "as is."

Avoid ice cream, candies and sweets, and excessive exposure to sunshine until you can stand it. And don't make your vacation work. Don't drive as if you were answering a fire alarm, and when you arrive at your destination, don't do in one day what you should spread over two.

Keep in mind that your body has been accustomed to a certain routine, and like your automobile, it is gauged and geared to follow that pattern. If you abuse it you will have trouble, if you regard it you will have a good time.

for the future prosperity

WHEN you trade in the CO-OPERATIVE STORE you know that you receive all that you should. If there are any profits they are divided back to you according to your patronage in dividends.

Floodwood Co-operative Store, Floodwood, Minn., distributed $5000.00 in patronage dividends in November, 1934.

Cloquet Co-operative Society, Cloquet, Minn., distributed $17,000.00 in Nov., 1934.

There are hundreds of other Co-ops. that have done as well.

Why not have all consumers join together and do their own merchandising? Why not have our own wholesalers and factories as they have in European countries like Sweden, Norway, Finland, England and many others.

WHEN you trade in the CO-OPERATIVE STORE you know that you receive all that you should. If there are any profits they are divided back to you according to your patronage in dividends.

Floodwood Co-operative Store, Floodwood, Minn., distributed $5000.00 in patronage dividends in November, 1934.

Cloquet Co-operative Society, Cloquet, Minn., distributed $17,000.00 in Nov., 1934.

There are hundreds of other Co-ops. that have done as well.

Why not have all consumers join together and do their own merchandising? Why not have our own wholesalers and factories as they have in European countries like Sweden, Norway, Finland, England and many others.

CHAPTER I

IT WAS Armistice day in Tincup. The time was so far removed from that delirious date in 1918 that in many parts of the country the eleventh of November had come to be regarded as simply another day, but Tincup was a mill town and the surrounding country was timber land and in such a community almost any anniversary from the Fourth of July on down to the millwright's birthday is seized upon as an excuse to lay off and play.

So the camps which turned Nicholas Brandon's standing hardwood and hemlock into saw logs, and the mills which chewed them into dimension stuff and flooring and shingles were deserted, and the entire population of a big territory which had commenced pouring into town the evening before was joined for the day with the residents of Tincup in competing or watching or cheering or listening.

In consequence a mere event such as the arrival of the eastbound passenger train drew no attention whatever and so none but the station agent was there to greet the stranger as he dropped down from the rickety red smoking car between his pack-sack, slung from one shoulder, and old Don Stuart, literally dangling from his other arm. The agent, trundling his express truck and in a hurry to be done with duty and get back to the more exciting affairs which occupied the rest of the town, spoke:

"Hul-lo, Don! Back home, eh? Well . . . Glad t' see you!

"Better git up to the big doin's." Log rollin's just goin' on. Big time!"

As if to vindicate this prideful boast of one of its own, all Tincup and its company at the moment opened lips and compressed chests to send up a mighty, roaring shout of acclaim.

Slowly, the sharply contrasting pair moved off, the younger still half supporting the elder and moderating his gait to a stroll so Stuart's quick and audible breathing should grow no more pronounced.

A slender young man was climbing a jammer in the mill yard. He lifted himself above the heads of the crowd and held up a hand for silence. This, however, was not readily obtained. A drenched and dripping citizen was only just pulling himself from the chill waters of the pond, a self-conscious grin glued to his lips as the black hair was plastered to his brow by the soaking it had received. On a peeled cedar log in the pond a giant of a man in a gaily checkered shirt, peavey in his hands, balanced and surveyed the throng, a picture of frank and boastful self-satisfaction.

The slender man on the jammer continued to wave his hands and finally these jibes and compliments were smothered by other cries for silence.

"Give Birney a chanct, now!" a man shouted.

"Gents!" the man called Birney cried from his vantage point. "As chairman of the committee, I'm asking for help! This committee's worked hard. We got a long program of sports for today but this log-birling's going to flop unless we get more contests! All these folks 've come to town more to see this match than anything else on the card and what 've we showed 'em?

"Why, nothin'!" he answered his own question. "We had two preliminaries and a semi-final between the winners of them matches. Then this final which was a joke. There stands Bull Duval, whose partner in the preliminaries defaulted and who dumped the winner of the semi-final without half trying. I ask you, has he earned twenty-five dollars?"

A laugh arose and Duval, on the log, twisted his mustache and leered at the speaker.

"Here we raised a twenty-five dollar prize and half you river hogs got cold feet just because Duval said he was goin' to roll!" Birney was truly annoyed and took no pains to conceal it. "Ain't any of you lads got the sand to hand in your names and tackle the Bull. Where's your guts?" he pleaded. "Ain't there anybody here that needs twenty-five dollars?"

Another laugh went up and when it had subsided a voice said:

"Here's one. What'll I do to get it?"

This was a full, even, good-natured voice, and a quick silence fell upon the crowd, followed by an expectant buzz as the stranger moved forward, his bronzed face uplifted to the man on the jammer.

"Atta boy!" Birney cried. "All you got to do, friend, is to put Mr. Bull Duval off that log and stick by rules!"

The stranger slipped the pack strap from his shoulder, seated himself on a log, unlaced his shoes and unstrapped the bag. While he drew from its depths a pair of calked river boots and the cluster about him grew thicker a half dozen old men crowded around Don Stuart, shaking his hand and saying the usual things that men say to an old friend they have not seen for long.

One of these was a short, wiry little man with upturned nose and blue eyes and long lip.

"'Nd who's th' b'y, Donny?" he asked. "Who's th' b'y that's goin' to try Misther Brandon's pet bull?"

Stuart shook his head.

"He's a fine young gentleman, Bird-Eye, and that's all I know. Found me at th' Junction . . . broke and wantin' to . . . get back home to Tincup. Paid my fare . . . and helped me. Fine gentleman!"

Others came up, greeted Stuart and eyed him with true concern. Any could see that heavy sickness was on him.

Birney was bending over the stranger as he drew taut the laces of his river boots.

"Well, gents, we got one more to try for this prize money. Mister Bull Duval, king of the Mad Woman, will now take on Mister Ben Elliott . . . Mr. Ben Elliott of— Where'd you say you come from, Elliott?'

The stranger turned that good-natured smile on the spokesman and waved one hand in an indefinite but inclusive gesture.

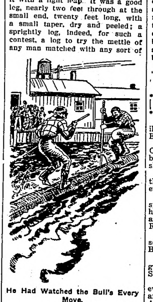
"Yonder," he said and grinned.

"Mr. Ben Elliott of Yonder will now roll against Mr. Bull Duval for the grand prize of twenty-five bucks! That rope around the log marks the middle, Elliott. Stay on your own end, don't touch the other man and anything-else goes!"

As a helper used a pike pole to drag the cedar with Duval upon it close, Elliott stood still and surveyed his adversary. His glance held that light of good nature and did not linger long on the Bull's glowering countenance. Rather, it dwelt on his pants and the river boots, sheding water in oily beads. After this, he looked Duval in the eye and grinned broadly.

A sound like a breath which is almost a laugh ran through the crowd. A likeable grin, that was, good natured, frank, fearless; men take to a grin of its kidney and on the instant, Ben Elliott, the stranger, had the crowd with him as against Bull Duval, said to be the king of the river.

The cedar came against the boom stick and Elliott took his place on it with a light leap. It was a good log, nearly two feet through at the small end, twenty feet long, with a small taper, dry and peeled; a sprightly log, indeed, for such a contest, a log to try the mettle of any man matched with any sort of contestant. Add to this, Bull Duval, the best river hog in Tincup, who hefted his peavey and glowered at the stranger.



He Had Watched the Bull's Every Move.

"I give y' two minutes," he growled.

"Thanks, buddy!" Elliott retorted. "I'd say that's sweet of you!"

"Are you ready?" Birney cried from shore.

Both nodded.

"Then let her go!"

A hush. Balanced on the log, faced in the same direction, double an arm's length from one another, they poised. And then Duval's right toe lifted, the heel pressing downward; the buoyant log moved quickly. His left foot raised free, sharp calks in its sole clawed savagely and with a mighty drive of the leg he had the cedar spinning beneath them.

Ben Elliott did not offer resistance. He followed the moving footing, walking for the first three or four turns and then, adding his impetus to the birling stick, commenced to trot, with each stride forcing the tempo of the turning.

Faster and faster, now. The trotting became a run; the run waxed to a nimble dance.

Up and down, up and down; a mad gallop of supple limbs, now, and then—

Duval leaped. He leaped high and without warning and, feet spread, drove his calks deep into the log again, hunching his shoulders, thrusting his peavey before him for balance, bending forward. The spin of the stick was checked sharply and had his opponent been caught unprepared, he certainly would have pitched face foremost into the pond.

But Elliott was not unprepared. He had watched the Bulls every move. He did not jump when Duval jumped; he waited a split instant, eyes on Duval's feet, and when he saw the toes pointed stiffly downward he rose nimbly into the air, a galloping break in his swift run, and came down, poised, spread-legged himself, crying out in an ejaculation of mock distress as he balanced on the cedar which swayed and heaved beneath them.

A great roar went up, cries of encouragement for the stranger, some shouts of admonition for their townsman. The Bull would have no cinch in this contest!

On the shore Bird-Eye pranced up and down, swinging his arms.

"Duck him, Elliott!" he yelled. "Duck th' big chunk! Sure 'nd he needs him a bath!"

The smooth bole gathered momentum swiftly and Elliott began to skip and dance, breaking the steady measure of his run. As his weight came and went irregularly upon the cedar it commenced to teeter, causing Duval's feet to splash in ankle-deep water. Again without warning, the Bull leaped. He went higher, this time, but instead of driving his spikes into the far side of the log and stopping its spin as he had done before, he drove them into the near side, increasing rather than checking the momentum.

"Got you, big boy," Elliott cried as he, too, came down running . . . and grinning.

That was quick thinking, instantaneous action. To leap was simple; but to determine the opponent's move and meet it with complacence and poise was another matter. To have come down to a stance, then, would have flung the challenger to wet defeat.

"Ah, th' big chunk ay a Bull's goin' to get that bath he needs!" Bird-Eye shrilled into the roar.

But this was only one man's enthusiasm, his animosity for Duval finding voice. Tincup knew that; and Ben Elliott knew it well. He—like the town—was waiting for the king of the Mad Woman to draw more items from his bag of tricks before he should assume the offensive.

Without a flicker of warning Duval dropped the pick of his peavey, twisting the shaft in his hands, flipping the hook open. The point plunked into the water, the hook bit into the log simultaneously and as the handle swung upward in a swift arc the man drove his weight on it. His body twisted, he grunted and his face wrenched into a lightning expression of great strain as the cedar, in a quarter turn, stopped dead. . . . And Ben Elliott, back bowed acutely, peavey high above his head, teetered back to balance on one foot, laughed aloud!

"Quick work, big boy!" he cried. "Almost got me!"

Sales Tax Bill Is Introduced in Senate

legislatures now in session is more important than that of relief," said Mr. Hunter.

The predominance of work relief over direct relief, or doles, in the new program of President Roosevelt and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration was stressed by Mr. Hunter.

"Direct relief is about the worst way to treat the problem of unemployment that anyone could think of," he said, pointing out that relief must be directed toward the end of giving jobs to those cannot find employment in private industry. No business upturn, he said, could absorb all the jobless

With the federal government's demands graphically presented Governor Olson and leaders in the Legislature at once drafted a relief bill to meet federal resuirements. It was introduced in the House of Representatives by a group of about 50 members.

Would Raise $11,000,000

This bill provides for the appropriation by the Legislature of $11,000,000 for relief purposes for the next biennium. The money is to be obtained for relief purposes by turning over all the state taxes on intoxicating liquors and beer for the years 1936, 1937, 1938 and 1939 for this purpose, as well as the surplus from such liquor tax revenues remaining in the state treasury at the end of 1935. The state will issue certificates of indebtedness, which will be repaid from liquor revenues. These certificates are to bear interest of not more than 4 per cent a year.

Of the $11,0000,000 to be appropriated $1,000,000 would go for supplemental aid to persons in the drouth areas and $1,500,000 for war veterans suffering from disabilities.

Under the plan outlined by the federal authorities, local governmental units in Minnesota will have to raise another $10,000,000 for the two periods in addition to the appropriation by the state. The federal relief officials hold that Minnesota and the local governments within the state must give at least $10,000,000 a year before the national government can provide the additional $40,000,000 a year deemed necessary to care for relief needs in the state.

Sales Tax Submitted

The long expected proposal for a form of sales tax came with the introduction of a bill for a one-half of one per cent occupational tax on the gross receipts of business. This measure was introduced in the Senate by three Conservative members—M. R. Cashman of Owatonna, James A. Carley of Plainview, and William L Roepke of Faribault. The bill also provides that after July 1 of this year no real or personal property in the state "taxed according to its true value" shall be taxed for all state and local purposes more than 37½ mills on its assessed valuation, which shall not exceed 40 percent of the full value.

This tax would affect every person in the state, because it would be levied on receipts from the sale of articles that must be used by all. While the rate of the tax is one-half of 1 percent, the actual cost of this to the ultimate consumers who must eventually pay it, is higher, because it is levied on the transactions of the producer of materials the manufacturer of finished goods, the wholesaler and the retailer.

At a joint public hearing conducted by the tax committees of the House and the Senate in the Senate chamber indications were given that optimists who have hoped to lift the entire tax burden from real estate by means of some form of sales tax are due for disappointment.

How Others Fare

Harold L. Henderson of the Minnesota Institute of Governmental Research pointed out experiences in other states showing that sales taxes have not brought in nearly so much revenue as anticipated by their sponsors. For instance, in South Dakota, where it had been expected that the sales tax would produce more than $12,000.000 a year, it returned only a little more than $2.000,000.

A bill embodying one of the aims expressed by Governor Olson in his opening message to the Legislature has been introduced by Senator George Lommen of Eveleth, one of the liberal leaders in the upper house. It would permit municipalities producing or distributing electricity to extend electric service to customers outside their limits.

The controlling body of such a public plant, after deciding upon the extension of service by a majority vote, would submit the question to voters of the municipality at a general, or special election. In cities operating under home rule charters, where a vote is not now necessary to extend electric service, no vote would be necessary, under the terms of Senator Lommen's bill.

Potential "Firecrackers"

Various potential "firecrackers" have been tossed into the legislative hopper.

There s the resolution by Senator Carley for an investigation of various state departments controlled by the Farmer-Labor administration. At the instance of Senator Lommen the Rules committee amended the resolution to include investigation of the office of the Republican secretary of state, Mike Holm, and the Railroad and Warehouse commission, which was dominated by Republicans until Charles Munn of Osseo, Farmer-Laborite, took office.

The Education committee of the Senate at its meeting last Thursday voted to lay on the table the question of the confirmation of three members appointed to the State Board of Education by Governor Olson. These are Mrs. Marion LeSueur, Miss Florence Rood and Peter J. Seberger. The committee's action meant postponement of the time when these confirmations come out on the floor of the Senate, where they are expected to produce some spirited debate.

Senator Fay Cravens of Milaca who was kept away from the opening of the session by illness has recovered and taken his seat in the Senate.

prospective stockholders. Thomson's high-price attorneys made no attempt to establish by witnesses any facts or figures to justify the claims made in the literature. In fact, the defense offered no testimony whatever but banked upon the claims that its attorneys made in the arguments to the jury that the $3.20 per share profit was true as to the affiliate banks though not actually true as to the Northwest Bancorporation itself.

The claim of profits for the affiliate banks controlled by the Bancorporation is absurd since the latter owns on an average nearly 90 percent of the stock of the banks under its control. Hence profits amounting to $3.20 per share on the part of the banks would of necessity have to be reflected in substantial profits to the holding company if such profits actually existed. On the contrary the Bancorporation's own books showed that during the years of 1930 and 1931 losses were sustained though this fact was not made known to the public or to the employes in the 134 affiliated banks who, like the public were made the victims of a high-powered stock-selling campaign.

'Bob' Pack's Advice

In this connection it is interesting to know that the Bancorporation's drive to sell stock to its customers was inspired by none other than Robert F. Pack, president of the Northern States Power Company. Mr. Pack told of the success that his company had had in putting over such campaigns and predicted that the same would work out successfully for the Bancorporation.

The acquittal of Mr. Thomson is not after all so important as many may imagine. The light has been turned on the affairs of the powerful chain-bank group that Mr. Thomson represents. The Banco's methods have been made known to tens of thousands of persons who had known little nothing of them before. In the future it will not be as easy for "Big Business" groups to plunder unsuspecting investors as easily as these groups have accomplished the same in years gone by.

Case Ably Prosecuted

The prosecution was ably conducted. W. E. G. Watson of Minneapolis, special assistant attorney general, acted as chief prosecutor. He was assisted by Roger Rutchick, assistant attorney general, and by Garfield W. Rustad of Moorhead, special assistant attorney general. In addition, the state prosecutors had the aid of the following persons from the division of securities: S. Paul Skahen, commissioner; Kenneth Haycraft and Robert Greenberg, investigators; Mrs. Gertrude E. McGonagle and Mrs. Bessie Woodworth, reporters.

Whether other cases pending against persons connected with the Northwest Bancorporation will be prosecuted in the Clay county district court remains to be seen. That is a matter that will rest with the Securities Department and with the office of Attorney General Harry H. Peterson.

Rome's Early Population

There wasn't any painstaking government census in Caesar's day, but there exist enumerations of houses and various other reckonings upon which estimates of the population of the ancient city have been based—estimates which vary widely. Edward Gibbon, author of "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," gave the city an estimated population of 1,200,000 in the early days of the Christian era. Other writers place the population of the city at that time as high as 12,000,000 or 14,000,000, and the number of houses at 2,000,000 or 3,000,000. But all calculations are liable to be erroneous because of the conjectural allowance of the inhabitants to each house.

legislatures now in session is more important than that of relief," said Mr. Hunter.

The predominance of work relief over direct relief, or doles, in the new program of President Roosevelt and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration was stressed by Mr. Hunter.

"Direct relief is about the worst way to treat the problem of unemployment that anyone could think of," he said, pointing out that relief must be directed toward the end of giving jobs to those cannot find employment in private industry. No business upturn, he said, could absorb all the jobless.

With the federal government's demands graphically presented Governor Olson and leaders in the Legislature at once drafted a relief bill to meet federal resuirements. It was introduced in the House of Representatives by a group of about 50 members.

Would Raise $11,000,000

This bill provides for the appropriation by the Legislature of $11,000,000 for relief purposes for the next biennium. The money is to be obtained for relief purposes by turning over all the state taxes on intoxicating liquors and beer for the years 1936, 1937, 1938 and 1939 for this purpose, as well as the surplus from such liquor tax revenues remaining in the state treasury at the end of 1935. The state will issue certificates of indebtedness, which will be repaid from liquor revenues. These certificates are to bear interest of not more than 4 per cent a year.

Of the $11,0000,000 to be appropriated $1,000,000 would go for supplemental aid to persons in the drouth areas and $1,500,000 for war veterans suffering from disabilities.

Under the plan outlined by the federal authorities, local governmental units in Minnesota will have to raise another $10,000,000 for the two periods in addition to the appropriation by the state. The federal relief officials hold that Minnesota and the local governments within the state must give at least $10,000,000 a year before the national government can provide the additional $40,000,000 a year deemed necessary to care for relief needs in the state.

Sales Tax Submitted

The long expected proposal for a form of sales tax came with the introduction of a bill for a one-half of one per cent occupational tax on the gross receipts of business. This measure was introduced in the Senate by three Conservative members—M. R. Cashman of Owatonna, James A. Carley of Plainview, and William L Roepke of Faribault. The bill also provides that after July 1 of this year no real or personal property in the state "taxed according to its true value" shall be taxed for all state and local purposes more than 37½ mills on its assessed valuation, which shall not exceed 40 percent of the full value.

This tax would affect every person in the state, because it would be levied on receipts from the sale of articles that must be used by all. While the rate of the tax is one-half of 1 percent, the actual cost of this to the ultimate consumers who must eventually pay it, is higher, because it is levied on the transactions of the producer of materials the manufacturer of finished goods, the wholesaler and the retailer.

At a joint public hearing conducted by the tax committees of the House and the Senate in the Senate chamber indications were given that optimists who have hoped to lift the entire tax burden from real estate by means of some form of sales tax are due for disappointment.

Harold L. BATTLE RAGES ON RELIEF AND APPOINTMENTS

Bitter Fight Looms on the Vicious Sales Tax Measure

By Lieut. Gov. Hjalmar Petersen
(Week of Jan. 27 to Feb. 2)

Both houses of the Minnesota Legislature witnessed real displays of fireworks on the floor during the week.

In the Senate there was the battle over the membership of the Carley Committee which will investigate state departments; in the House the fight between the liberals and conservatives on the question of relief held the spotlight.

The relief dispute obviously is the more important of the two—it is, without question, one of the principal issues confronting this session of the Legislature, just as it is one of the pressing problems now before the Congress of the United States.

Important Test Vote

One of the most important tests so far in this legislative session came Thursday when the House was debating a motion of Representative H. C. Anderson of Tyler for the passage, under suspension of the rules, of the $1,000,000 drouth relief bill sponsored by the conservative leaders. This bill was reported favorably by the House Appropriations Committee. Liberals fought it, insisting that consideration be given to the original relief bill submitted by the Relief Committee after it had conferred with Governor Olson. This bill calls for the appropiation of $11,000,000 for the next biennium, $1,000,000 to go for immediate relief to the farmers in the drouth areas.

It is the contention of the liberals that to pass the $1,000,000 drouth relief bill, leaving the remaining $10,000,000 of the relief program in abeyance, would jeopardize Minnesota's chances of obtaining the full amount of federal relief offered under the new program of the Roosevelt administration.

According to Howard O. Hunter regional Federal Emergency Relief administrator, this will amount to at least $40,000,000 in the next year. When Mr. Hunter addressed the Legislature recently he gave out the ultimatum that unless Minnesota enacted legislation meeting the federal government's terms the national relief administration would cut off its relief contributions to the state after March 1.

SEED TREATING DISCUSSION TO FEBRUARY 19

C.C. Allison, Representive of AAA, Will Be Principal Speaker

Seed treating, the importance of it and the methods to use, are to be discussed for farmers of this county at a meeting to be held Tuesday, February 19th at the Court Room in the Court House Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

County Agent R. M. Douglass who has arranged this meeting announces that the speaker will be Mr. C. C. Allison, representing the state agricultural extension service and the AAA.

Improved materials and methods have made the treating of seed much easier and simpler than it was a few years ago. These facts will be presented at the seed treating meeting, where the speaker will also explain the importance of treating seed, especially that which will be shipped into the county this year.

If farmers and others present show a desire, an attempt will be made to work out plans by which farmers can have their seed treated at a local elevator where large capacity equipment can be used. All farmers, elevator managers and others interested are urged to be on hand for this meeting and to ask any questions they wish concerning their crop disease problems.

PROWLERS DRUB WARREN AGAIN ON FRIDAY NITE

Prowler Seconds Defeat the Warren Seconds at Warren

The high school basket ball team will play Crookston here Friday night at the Auidtorium in a game which promises to be the best of the year. It is thoght that Crookston has the best high school team of any in this district with the exception of the local team, and it is this exception which must be proved Friday.

As an added inducement to the local basket-ball fans Mr. Bye announced that on Tuesday night a special "family admission" price will be offered to parents and children of school age. School children accompanied by one or both of their parents will be admitted with their parents on a twenty-five cent ticket. Unaccompanied children and adults alone will be charged the regular admission price.

Last Friday evening the Prowlers defeated Warren at Warren 37 to 18; this is the second time these two teams have met, the first game being won by the Prowlers 76 to 9 on the home floor. The Warren second team bowed to the Prowler second team 30 to 4 in the preliminary game Fiday night.

The car was found about an hour later by the Grand Forks police, who also apprehended a youth who admitted the theft.

The car was badly damaged and it was estimated that at least $128 would be necessary to repair the damage done; the youth stated his willingness to pay the damage and Mr. Snyder dropped the charge against him. D., who lives in Fargo and it was thought by the police that he had been drinking or he never would have taken the automobile.

Goodridge Buttermaker Refutes Claim Of Higher Prices at Pelican Rapids

Dear Editor:

After reading the article in the last week's issues of the T. R. Falls local papers signed by some of the stockholders of the Thief River Falls Co-op. Creamery Ass'n, I could not refrain from answering that part of the article referring to prices paid for butterfat by Pelican Rapids, Fergus Falls, and Sebeka creameries.

As an operator of a Land O' Lakes creamery, I feel it my duty to my own patrons as well as to patrons of other Land O' Lakes creameries, that that paragraph relating to prices paid by the above mentioned creameries should not go unanswered because of its untruthfulness.

Having worked in creameries in Ottertail and Wadena counties for several years, it has given me a splendid opportunity to study the annual reports from creameries in that section of the state.

In the first place you are making a very unfair comparison in that you do not take either volume or quality into consideration. Pelican Rapids, Sebeka, and Fergus Falls creameries have an output from four to six times as large as the Thief River Falls creamery and also have a higher quality of cream which gives these creameries a decided advantage over the smaller creameries in this section of the state. But even at that I find that the creameries selling to Land O' Lakes received a price which compares very favorably with prices received by Pelican Rapids, which is one of the largest creameries in the state and has the advantage of shipping in carload lots direct from one creamery.

I have before me annual reports from Roseau and Thief River Falls, both Land O' Lakes creameries and Pelican Rapids which was referred to in the article and I submit the following figures from these reports:

SUBMITS PLAN TO LIQUIDATE RURAL CREDIT

Gilbert Brattland Urges the Immediate Liquidation Of Rural Credits

Gilbert Brattland, who was formerly employed by the Rural Credits Dept., has come forward with a plan for the immediate liquidation of the department which would, at the same time, return lands to their original owners.

The proposed plan calls for the issuance of certificates of indebtedness by the state which would bear 2½ per cent interest; the money would be re-loaned to the farmers at 3 per cent, which would be a 40 per cent reduction from the present rate now paid on money by the farmers.

A bill of this kind has been advocated for a number of years by progressive legislators, but because of the lack of interest shown by the people no legislation along this line has been procured. The bill embodying this plan which is the best known to most of the people is the Frazier-Lemke Bill. This bill calls for the refinancing of farm mortgages by the issuance of United States Treasury Certificates, bearing 5 per cent interest of which interest 1½ per cent would be for amortization. Mr. Brattland's plan would make it possible for the state to raise money to take advantage of the low interest rate immediately.

A small circular is being circulated which calls on all taxpayers business men, tenant farmers and borrowers to organize back of this plan; his circular embodies the following:

(1) Immediate LIQUIDATION OF THE BUREAU.

(2) Re-appraisal of all lands, loans and contracts by a representative of the state, appointed by the Tax Commission, a County Commissioner and an officer of the Town Board.

(3) Refinancing at such re-appraisals of all loans and sales contracts at 3 per cent, payable annually, in the fall. If loan or contract is less than appraisal, then refinancing such balance at the same rates.

Graduate Foresters To Register at NRS

Any unemployed graduate forester who has not registered with the National Reemployment Service should do so at once, according to Donald L. Snyder, manager of the National Reemployment office at Thief River Falls. The contemplated expansion of the forestry program has created at demand for men trained in general forestry which is expected to exceed the supply not only in Minnesota but in adjoining states. Forestry students who have had two or more years of forestry training are also asked to register.

A limited number of woodsmen and cruisers who are able to do mapping may be employed. Even though the possibilities of employment for men with such experience are not as definite as for graduate foresters, it is suggested that they also register.

WHY DO WOMEN OUTLIVE MEN?

Insurance Figures Show Weaker Sex Lives Three Years Longer Than "Lords of Creation"

W. G. Calderwood

A recent statement by the Doctors Mayo, world-famed physicians of Rochester, Minnesota, reminds us that woman, often referred to as the "weaker sex," outlives man by an average of three years, according to American experience. The present average span of life for man is fity-eight years, while the average woman lives to sixty-one. While this is not news, it is always a surprise. It is beyond question that woman is physically frailer than man. A mass of reliable statistics gathered from the experience of health insurance companies show that she is more susceptible to disease and less resilient in recovery. moreover these figures do not include the disability suffered in child-birth, since health insurance does not cover this hazard, nor other disorders that are not "common to both sexes."

Yet, American experience definitely establishes the fact that on the average she lives longer. And there must be a reason.

Dr. Haven Emerson, former health commsisioner of New York City, and now head of the department of Public Health Administration in Columbia University, in his recent book, "Alcohol, Its Effects on Man," states that insurance figures show that if abstainers are rated at 100 on the basis of their mortality, the infrequent moderate drinker will rate 122; the temperate users will rate 142, and those who describe themselves as "moderate users" will rate 212.

The fact that, in the past, woman has been much more abstemious than man, may solve the anomoly of the frail outliving the sturdy sex. Whether that is a valid conclusion or not, the undeniable figures of the actuary shows that the abstainer has the advantage of 22 points over the infrequent drinkers and 112 points over drinkers who call themselves moderate users.

CCC STRESSES WINTTR FOREST CONSERVATION

With the Minnesota Conservation Commission actively engaged in outlining continued forest improvement policies in cooperation with the Divison of Forestry and Fire Prevention, Emergency Conservation Work in state forests is making rapid progress. Grover Conzet, state forester, stated that winter work is being done where "results are more satisfactory than when this work is performed during summer months."

Construction work, road graveling ,brush burning and survey work are being stressed. Trail and road corners are being located by engineers. Considerable cultural work such as thinning ,and release cutting, removing of worthless large trees that are crowding out the more valuable ppoduction, is being done by members of the Civilian Conservation Corps in state forests.

Project Workers Must Earn Their Wages; SERA

The Minnesota SERA (State Emergency Relief administration) through an official order from Walter F. MacGregor, director of the work division, has laid down the ultimatum that persons employed on work relief projects must render efficient service or invite permanent removal from the work relief payrolls.

Project supervisors have authority to enforce this penalty, with due regard to the physical condition of the worker concerned. If a worker displays a pronounced unwillingness to perform labor assigned to him, he may be designated as "unemployable" and placed on direct relief permanently, subject to reversal by a special committee of review. This committee comprises the local supervisors for work and social service, and the accounting and disbursing officer. A relief client who wishes his status changed from "unemployable" to "employable" may appeal to this committee, and in case of disagreement, to the state work division.

The order also provides for keeping a record, so that if, and when, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration frees itself from all responsibility for unemployable persons, the status of each such person may be known. Those who are barred from public works for cause as above, will experience difficulty in obtaining a permanent job, when jobs will again be available, Mr. MacGregor stated.

Minnesota Iron Ore Shipments Show Gain

A gain in the totel shipment of iron ore from Minnesota mines is noted for the year 1934 although there was a slight decrease in the amount of ore shipped from state-owned mines, from a report by F. A. Wildes, Director of the Division of Lands and Minerals.

In 1934 Minnesota mines forwarded 16,026,000 gross tons of regular iron ore with a value of $42,829,000, at the rate of $2.67 per ton, the report indicated. To this tonnage and value, state-owned iron mines contributed 3,170,000 gross tons or about 22½ per cent of the total shipments. The value of this state ore was $8,456,000.

In 1923 total iron ore shipments amounted to 14,953,168 gross tons with state mines contributing 3,604,447 gross tons to the total.

Under prevailing leases, state trust funds are paid a royalty based on the weight o fthe crude ore before treatment of any kind. Because of this method the state received royalty payments in 1934 on a tonnage of 3,609,100 tons in round figures, Mr. Wildes said.

Of all iron ore produced in the United States during the year 1934, 85 per cent came from the Lake Superior district made up of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, the director pointed out.

Ore tonnage containing five per cent or more of manganese proved considerable last year and is not included in the figures given for Minesota shipments.

New Purchase Area For Superior Forest

Local residents in St. Louis and Lake counties will be interested in a new addition to the Superior National Forest, stated Grover Conzet, state forester. The National Forest Reservation Commission approved an addition of 803,000 acres at its meeting which took place January 21. This addition will help block out the present boundaries of the Superior National Forest, which already has 1,810,129 acres within its boundaries. This will bring the total acreage for this forest to 2,613,129 acres exclusive of the Mesaba Purchase Unit. The new area adjoins the Superior forest on the south and west.

This 803,000 acres is entirely a new area to be purchased and before it can be definitely added to the Superior forest, the land will have to be thoroughly examined and cruised before the procedure of option and purchase takes place.

"The addition of this area will mean additional employment of individuals now badly in need of work," Mr. Conzet said. "Far from being a temporary work program, the construction, improvement and maintenance of roads, telephone lines, the construction of protection and administration improvements, planting and timber stand improvement will provide work to local inhabitants for a long time to come. The history of the old Superior National Forest bears this out."

Planters Frame Share Croppers' Organizers

Memphis, Tenn. — Ward H. Rodgers, FERA teacher and an official of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, is the latest victim of the cotton planters in their fight to destroy this rapidly growing union of shareholders.

A jury of planters convicted Rodgers of "anarchy" on Jan. 21 at Marked Tree, Arkansas. As proof of "anarchy" the prosecutor cited:

That Rodgers had organized Negro as well as white share-croppers.

That he had called Negroes "Mister."

That he had said "relief for tenant farmers will not come until the United States government abolishes the plantation system."

Defense Being Formed

The case will be appealed to the Arkansas circuit court, C. T. Carpenter, defense attorney, announced. At present Rodgers, unable to furnish $3,000 bond, is held in the Harrisburg, Ark. jail.

A nation-wide defense committee to aid Rodgers is being organized. Norman Thomas will head the committee.

Thomas has already telephoned from New York that defense funds are being collected for the court appeal. Thomas later will visit Tennessee and Arkansas to address share-croppers' mass meetings. On his visit to Tyronza, Ark., last winter he helped organize the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union, which has since enrolled hundreds of the enslaved Negro and white cotton farmers.

Ku Klux Klan Revived

The union, however, soon encountered bitter resistance from the plantation owners who resorted to night raids to terrorize union members. The Ku Klux Klan has recently been revived to fight the union in the counties where it is strong.

Four union members, two negroes and two white, are awaiting trial on Feb. 4 on charges of "interfering with labor." They face a sentence to the Arkansas penal farm—where the treatment is similar to that in force in the notorious Georgia chain gangs.

One reason for the planters bitter offensive against the union is the recent intervention of the U. S. Department of Agriculture in their evictions of the share-cropper members. A few weeks ago a delegation, headed by H. L. Mitchell, union secretary called upon Secretary Wallace in Washington and protested against the discrimination.

U .S. Quizzing Planters

The AAA thereupon wired Hiram Norcross, a wealthy planter, that futher payments on his crop reduction contract would be withheld until the charges against him in court had been investigated. Meanwhile, the union's injunction suit against Norcross to restrain him from evicting 25 families was carried directly to the Supreme Court of Arkansas.

A Ku Klux Klan campaign of terror and prosecution of leaders through the planter controlled courts' has been the employers' response.

The share-croppers are probably the most exploited workers in America. According to a study made in 1934 for the Socialist party and the League for Industrial Democracy by Prof. William R. Amberson of the University of Tennessee Medical School, the total income for the average share-cropper family is less than $300 a year. This includes the value of the food they raise for their own use.

VALUABLE DATA FROM STATE FOREST SURVEYS

Data which will prove of inestimable value to future forestry conservation within the boundaries of state forests is being gathered this winter by Civilian Conservation Corps workers under the supervision of the Division of Forestry. These extensive surveys are expected to "complete mapping of state forests and material will be obtained for complete management plans for each forest," Grover Conzet, state forester, said.

"Information relative to settlers within the forest areas, road, timber estimates, reproduction, and soil and forest cover type maps are included in the surveys. Data compiled will be used both in fire protection and forest management work."

McFARLANE ATTENDS NATIONAL GAME MEET

Minnesota's Department of Conservation was represented at the annual American Game Conference held in New York last week by Charles McFarlane, deputy director of the Division of Game and Fish.

Included in the discussions were scientific game research and breeding, game management, fish administration and many related subjects. A 1935 moratorium on wild migratory waterfowl was voted down after considerable arguments pro and con, Mr. McFarlane reported.

HITLER ESCAPES SERIOUS AIRPLANE ACCIDENT

Berlin (TIS)—That the government order which forbade flying over Berlin during the surprise meeting of the Nazi leaders at the Opera House was not based on unsubstantiated fear has been learned in well informed circles.

For the first time in his political career, Adolph Hitler met recently with an airplane accident, while flying, as usual, from his Bavarian retreat to the capital. The pilot was forced to effect an emergency landing when it was discovered that some one had tampered with the airplane. This is one of the many rumors of attempts against the life of the Leader which have been definitely verified. Consequently, protective measures for the Nazi rulers have been doubled as shown by the precautions in Berlin, where heavily armed black shirt formations faced alternately the road and the spectators lined up on the sidewalks.

John Norman of St. Hilaire Dies at his Home Tuesday

John Norman, of St. Hilaire, died at his home Tuesday afternoon, Jan. 28th at the age of 80 years. Mr .Norman had been in fair health during the winter and his sudden death come as a surprise to his friends. He had lived in the United States since 1882 at which time he immigrated from Sweden, the land of his birth ,and started his life in this country at LaCrosse, Wis., where he was employed for a number of years; later he took a homestead in Polk County and in 1897 he married Margaret Ryberg and they lived at their present residence for the past 26 years. He is survived by his wife and ten children; his children are: Mrs. Ann Ingvalson, Andrew, George, John Norman who are living at Hilaire, and Mrs. Gust Anderson of Wylie and three Grandchildren. Two sons preceded him in death, Edgar and Yngve Norman.

Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon at the Mission Church of St. Hilaire and a short service was held at his home. Rev. C. G. Anderson of Roseau and Rev. J. C. Brekke officiated. A men's quartet from the Lutheran Bible School of Grand Forks sang several selections. Interment was made at the cemetery east of St. Hilaire.

Bones Million Years Old Dug Up

Workmen sinking a well in New South Wales unearthed a set of huge bones estimated to have lain in gravel for millions of years.

NEGLECT TO FILE GAME REPORT BARS LICENSE

Thursday, January 31, marks the final day for the filing of game reports, Minnesota hunters were warned by Erling Swenson, Director of the Division of Game and Fish. Neglect to file report of game taken on both small and big game hunting licenses bars issuance of hunting licenses for the year 1935, Mr. Swenson said.

"We have received thousands of reports of game taken and work is progressing rapidly in compiling results,' the director stated. "There are many hunters who have to date failed to file their returns. We urge that this information be forwarded to the division so that as complete a record as possible my be obtained relative to the amount of game taken in the state last fall during the open hunting seasons."

"Entered as second-class matter, April 27, 1932, at the post office at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, under Act of March 3, 1897."

Most governments have been based practically on a denial of the equal rights of man. Ours began by affirming these rights. They said, "some men are too ignorant and vicious to share in the government." "Possibly so," said we, "and by your system you would always keep them ignorant and vicious." We propose to give them all a chance; and we expect the weak to grow stronger, the ignorant wiser and happier and better altogether.—Abraham Lincoln.

DAILY NEWS WORRIES ABOUT POOR VOTERS

The St. Paul Daily News is somewhat exercised about the poor North Dakota voters who were disfranchised by the ousting of Governor Moody when the Supreme court of that state held that he is not qualified under the laws of the state to hold the office of governor. The laws of North Dakota provide that a man must be not less than five years a resident of the state in order to qualify for the office of governor and if Moody didn't know it when he ran for the office, he was deplorably uninformed for a man editing a daily newspaper and running for the office of governor of his state. If he did know the law in the case and still ran for the office he was perpetrating a fraud upon the voters and being disqualified should be a fitting rebuke. He received a majority of votes, the News says, and deduces that consequently he should have been seated. But would he have received a majority of the vote if the voters had known that he could not qua'ify?

In the meantime the Daily News has shed no tears for the voters of the 65th Lgislative District who were disfranchised and still are disfranchised by the conservatives in the House of Representatives who keep Waldal seated and Day twiddling his thumbs on the farm in spite of the fact that a count, a recount, and a court decision has established the fact that Day received the majority of the votes in this district.

It seems to us that a constitutional amendment providing that the man who is elected shall be seated and the House of Representatives or the Senate, as the case may be, has nothing to say about it, would be in order.

CAN INDUSTRY CARRY THE LOAD?

In a lengthy editorial under the above caption, the Christian Century magazine questions the possibility of recovery under the plan or lack of plan, with which the Roosevelt administration is attacking the problem.

Citing the President's plan for social insurance, however small and unavailing to meet the crisis with which the people are faced, the Christian Century points out that this social load must be added to the other load of profit-taking, without which the profit system cannot function, and sees little hope for even a semblance of recovery. Speaking of the Rooseveltian experiments the Christian Century says:

"Mr. Roosevelt's experiment begins with the general thesis that industry must carry a social load—that is, it must do more than make profits for its owners and managers and a precarious living for a certain percentage of its workers. It must take care of all the workers, If they are employed, they must be paid decent wages. If they cannot find employment, industry must nevertheless support them—by employment insurance or by a job on public works. If they are unemployable,—too old, industry must provide them pensions; ill, industry in the form of taxes (state and local) must provide them direct aid. In principlel, what Mr. Roosevelt is moving toward is an economic system in which the whole population is loaded upon the shoulders of productive industry and supported by it—the old and the young, the sick and the well, the owners and the workers, the employed and the unemployed."

Continuing the Christian Century says:

"This is the load Mr. Roosevelt is laying upon the back of industry. We are stating it in terms of principle, not of concrete details. The actual 'pension' is too small to be called 'support.' The 'insurance' is only $15 a week at the maximum, and then only for sixteen weeks. The wage on public works will be below the wage in private industry. But disregarding all these details, the principle is as we have stated it—the compelling of industry to bear the entire human load. That is a new thing in America. It is relatively a new thing in the world. That industry must be held responsible for carrying the whole human load that is the essence of the modern gospel of social justice.

"Can industry bear such a load? Is not Mr. Roosevelt demanding the impossible?"

The Christian Century says that "Mr. Roosevelt's demands are impossible of realization within the limits of the privately-owned, profit-motivated economic system." However, the demands are "not impossible if the nation applies its intelligence to the construction of an economic system which will give to every man that direct and responsible access to economic opportunity which the present system denies him."

The fact that fifteen million people have signed the Townsend petitions is proof that "a new conception of prosperity is abroad. This conception is based upon the tremendous productive capacity of the country."

In closing the Christian Century states:

"An industrial order with a vast productive capacity like ours which cannot provide a comfortable old age for its citizens is indeeed absurd.

"Mr. Roosevelt says he is trying to save capitalism. It is more likely that, by compelling it to bear the burdens of social justice he is shattering capitalism. A profit-motivated capitalism cannot support such a burden. The roots and sap of that tree are selfishness and greed. Such a tree cannot bring forth the good fruit of social justice. Grapes do not spring from thorns nor figs from thistles. The economy envisaged by Mr. Roosevelt is at bottom something esentially social, and religious. Such an economy can grow only from the roots of social and humane cooperation."

The arguments of the Christian Century seem to us to be irrefutable, and is borne out by the figures cited in the same article which shows that capital went on strike in 1929 because the market was glutted with goods altho even at that time of so-called prosperity the volume of production was far below that which would have been required for all Americans to live up to what is commonly called an American standard. Since that time the opportunity for profit-taking has shrunk still further with the diminishing purchasing power of the people and any added load must inevitabley break down the system of capitalism. However, unless industry does take on the added load capitalism must break down anyway, if for no other reason than that the American people will refuse to live forever on a pauper basis in the midst of potential plenty.

AN UNPRECEDENTED MILITARY BUDGET
(The Christian Century)

Now that Americans have had their fill of viewing with alarm Japan's adoption of the largest peace-time military budget in its history, perhaps they will give a little attention to the army and navy budget which President Roosevelt submitted to congress two weeks ago. For the United States, also, is asked by the President to spend more than it has ever before spent in time of peace to make its war services ready for combat! Nor does the President content himself with recommending a slight increase in the military budget, as do the Tokyo militarists. On the contrary, he calls for an expenditure of $792,484,265 by the war and navy departments in the fiscal year starting next July 1st, which is $180,000,000 more than was appropriated for these departments during the current fiscal year, and $312,000,000 more than was appropriated in the year which ended last June 30. This means an increase in direct military appropriations of approximately 65 per cent over what was devoted to this purpose in the last year If the fighting forces get another slice of PWA money this year, as it is expected they will, the total provided for military purposes will probably come up to the billion dollar mark! All this after the President's message has assured congress and the country that "there is no ground for apprehension that our relations with any other nation will be otherwise than peaceful!"

MUNITIONS AND BRIBES
(Austin American)

As a result of the World War, many strange disillusioning bits of evidence have been brought before the people of the world. Things they never before knew about their governmnts and about htose gentlemen of their nations whose every action make the front page are coming to the fore. Indisputable evidence of graft, trickery, and "within the law" dishonesty has been presented.

Most of this evidence has come as the result of such gigantic social upheavals as the Russian Revolutionary of 1917, the birth of the German Republic in 1918, the disintegration of Austro-Hungary, and the facist rise to power in Italy. None of the ruling groups voluntarily opened their books to the public gaze.

Therefore the United States should feel proud to know that such able men as Senators Nye and Clark have taken it upon their shoulders to expose the doings of various respected and well thought of individuals in connection with war profiteering.

Evidence brought out by the Senate Munitions Investigating committee regarding sale of war materials to China brought forth the fact that the Remington Arms Company, a duPont subsidiary, paid fat bribes to Chinese officials to put over this sale.

"It's an old Chinese custom," explained a duPont witness when faced with the evidence.

That may be true, but further investigation into the duPont files showed that bribery was also an old Balkan custom, a South American habit, and the usual thing in the countries where American, British and German munitions makers carried or a veritable "Arabian Nights" of government corruption.

More power to Senator Nye and his committee!

EASILY EXPLAINED
(St. Louis Co. Independent)

In one of his recent News and Comments columns R. W. Hitchcock, discussing the make-up of the legislatures past and present, said:

> "The Farmer-Labor party manifests in the Legislature a solidarity which is conspicuously absent with republicans and democrats."

This is easily explained because the Farmer-Labor party has a definite legislative program; something fundamental upon which the party as a whole is entirely agreed and which its members are not afraid to back up.

It is different with the reactionaries, whether they term themselves republicans or democrats, they are looking after their special interests at all times and are hardly ever united except when they are opposing the Farmer-Labor program or something that is of benefit to the common classes.

STOCKS, BONDS—AND BRICKS
(Minnesota Leader)

Don't think for a moment that because Insull, Thomson and others of like caliber come into court, are tried and go free, that all people charged with fraud, larceny, and theft are equally fortunate. Not so.

In Anderson, Ind., a 16-year-old boy stole 20 pounds of groceries. Groceries, mind you, food. They caught him. And justice moved swiftly. Judge Charles Smith sentenced the youngster to three years in the state reformatory or to carry 20 pounds of brick a distance of 1,500 miles. The boy chose the latter.

Now the citizens of the young man's home town, the Anderson Council of Women, and the Anderson Humane Society are protesting. Probably the criminal, the young man, will be paroled. But if experience teaches anything, it teaches that the youth would not have been convicted had he had a battery of high-powered lawyers. They could have proved that their client's intentions were good though he had the misfortune to be caught and charged with wrong-doing.

FARM and MARKET
BY
R. A. Trovatten, Minnesota Commissioner of Agriculture Dairy and Food

The Minnesota Legislature now in session is arousing more than the usual amount of public interest. In addition to newspaper dispatches, which are sent to all parts of the country by the two major newsgathering agencies. several radio commentators bring a day by day review of the happenings over various radio stations. Probably the most interesting of these is the Merry-Go-Round reporter who broadcasts each day over KSTP at 6:20 P. M.

It appears that the session is going to give some consideration to agriculture. At least several bills have been introduced which point to that indication. A bill has been introduced that Congress be memorialized on the question of fixing prices for the basic agricultural commodities. The Senate agricultural committee approved an appropriation of $2,000,000 for seed relief.

The weighers and graders bill has made its biennial occurance. The presentation of this bill always brings terrific pressure from the packing interests. The packers are out to kill the bill and the farmers are out to pass it. As usual the farmers have not had much success. The bill has been before the Legislature every session for the past twelve years, and so far it has failed.

A measure has been introduced which would forbid the packing companies to buy thin cattle and then fatten in their stock yards. It was brought out during the discussion of this bill that such is the practice of the packing companies.

In the interest of farm relief a barley- beer bill has been placed before the gentlemen of the Legislatre. This bill, should it become a law, will require the breweries to use a larger portion of barley in the manfacture of beer. It is said that the breweries now manufacture beer principally from rice, imported from China. It is claimed that barley makes better beer, but of course barley is more expensive than rice. A similar bill was introduced during the last special session. It passed the House but was killed in the Senate.Rather it never came out of the committee. Wisconsin has a barley-beer law, which is claimed to have brought considerable revenue to its farmers.

Another bill that attracts considerable interest is the cream grading law which is patterned to a large extent after the Manitoba law which produced such wonderful results in that province. Another measure is the so-called roadside market bill which is designed to prevent anybody except an actual producer to sell farm produce along the roadsides. One of the big problems confronting the Legislature, undoubtedly, is the various relief bills, and of special interest to the farmers is drouth relief. Problems arising from the serious drouth conditions of the state will undoubtedly occupy a large part of the time of the fore part of the session of the Legislature.

Washington Kaleidoscope

From Letter by Cong. E. J. Ryan

A potato advisory committee representing potato producers in sixteen states have asked the AAA to draft a bill whereunder the Secretary of Agriculture will determine in advance the advisable amount of potatoes to be marketed annually—allotments to be made to states and individual growers. The purpose of the bill would be to balance production with market demand. Potatoes would be designated as a basic commodity. This legislation would be similar to the Kerr-Smith Act for tobacco. No definite decision has been reached on the plan as yet.

There are at present six women representatives in Congress. They are Isabella Greenway, democrat of Tuscon, Arizona, who is a granddaughter of Judge Charles E. Flandrau, formerly of St. Paul; Mrs. Florence P. Kahn, republican, of San Francisco; Mrs. Edith Rogers, republican, of Lowell Massachusetts; Mrs. Mary Norton, democrat of Jersey City, New Jersey, and Mrs. Caroline O'Day, democrat of Rye, New York. There is one woman member of the Senate, Mrs. Hattie Caraway, democrat of Jonesboro, Arkansas. Mrs. Caraway, Mrs. Kahn and Mrs. Rogers were elected to succeed their husbands who died while in office.

The Minnesota Fire Sufferers' Bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Claims at its first meeting and will now go on the private calendar for consideration. This is a bill to reimburse sufferers in Northern Minnesota forest fires for their losses. It has been repeatedly introduced in successive Congresses but it has never quite achieved passage.

Protests are being made by the wheat producers and processors against recent publications of the Federal Department of Home Economics which recommend the use of less cereals. It is claimed that these bulletins, which are widely published in women's magazines. tend to cut down the wheat market which the Administration is laboring to build up. From 1914 to 1933 there has been a decline in wheat consumption in the United States of about 125,000,000 bushels. It would seem that the protests of the wheat growers are justified.

These bulletins likewise recommend less sugar consumption. This is of tremendous importance to the sugar beet farmer whose market at present is none too great.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

WHAT TO DO WITH DRUNKS

—o—

"The burning question of drunks and what to do with them," was the way the San Francisco Chronicle referred to the topic of discussion at a special meeting at the Elks' Club of that city during the holiday season, when members of the city's police department, the judiciary, women's clubs, parent-teacher organizations, social service and welfare groups the public health department and the district attorney's office conferred on the problem. According to the Chronicle reporter:

"The point is that nobody seems to want the chronic drunkards. The police are tired of housing them in the county jail where conditions are already overcrowded. Dr. J. C. Geiger says the county hospital is so crowded with indigent sick that no room can be found for alcoholics. Dr. J. M. Toner, director of state institutions, maintains that the state mental hospitals are being overrun with these offenders, who have a bad effect upon the insane who are complaining. Most of the city's gutters are being over-hauled, thus eliminating another possibility."

No final decision was reported.

WITH THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS
By the "Capital Reporter"

Conservative leaders in the Senate may try to abolish the state board of education and place its work in the hands of the University board of regents, the purpose being to take our educational system away from the liberalizing influence of the Farmer-Labor Administration. The regents, being elected by the Legislature would of course, be immune from political influence * * * One of the Twin Cities dailies commented that this was a very excellent plan to bring the University of Minnesota and the board of regents into politics * * *

There was a mild squabble in the House over the question of limiting the number of co-authors that may be attached to any one bill. Representative Stockwell and other liberal members insisted that the legislators ought to have the right to identify themselves with the law they favored. Conservative pointed with great concern to the fact that a large number of co-authors give the chief clerk's office a great deal of trouble. The matter was laid over for further consideration * *

Representative Crissy introduced for the House Emergency Relief Committee the bill appropriating $11,000,000 for relief purposes. Of this amount $1,000,000 will be distributed among the counties suffering from drouth conditions. Relief Administrator Zimmerman said that hay and straw was ready to be moved as soon as the legislature gave the authority . . . .

Senator Finstad would extend the power of the state highway patrol to include regular police duties. . . . . Representative Masek has drafted a bill providing for a graduated tax on gross sales of chain stores. The proposed tax graduates from 1-6 of one percent on sales up to $100,000 to two per cent on sales over $1,000,000. A chain store tax bill is pending before the senate also which would virtually double the present chain store tax. Mrs. Kempfer told the emergency relief committee that feed dealers are making use of disastrous conditions by asking prices that amount to robbery. .

Herbert H. Weir, advisor of the Recreational Division of the Natural Resourse Board addressed a joint session of the Senate and the House on conservation problems. Minnesota, he said, is destined to be one of the leading recreational states in the union. . . . . As usual, several thousand dollars worth of claims for damage caused by wild animals were presented to the legislature. The House appropriation committee has decided to reject all such claims.

A resolution memorializing Congress to take the profits out of war was introduced in the House by Representative Jesten. The resolution refers specifically to the disclosures of Senator Nye's munitions committee and states that taking profits out of war would automatically remove one of the greatest threats to peace. . . . .

It is evident that the conservatives have awakened at last to the real needs of the people for human and stock relief. During the last session the die-hard element was still singing the praises of rugged individualism. This year little or no difficulty is expected in appropriating the necessary relief funds.

Representative Hart said that he will introduce a bill prohibiting the "bargain sale" method of collecting over-due taxes. . . . This bargain sale plan has resulted in an increase in tax delinquency, since it has placed a premium on nonpayment of taxes. Under it, a property owner can allow his taxes to become delinquent over a period of years and then come in and obtain full settlement by a part payment. The penalty is borne by the property owners who pay promptly. The reverse should be the case.

A schoolboy's tale, the wonder of an hour—Byron.

Having chosen my text, I proceed with the sermon.—American culture has become a tissue of schoolboy fancies—the movies, the magazines, the stage, the radio—all are concerned with the little unusual things that might strike a person as being eccentric and bizarre at the moment, but which dissolve into a steady mediocrity. I need not quote examples—try them yourself. You will find that after the first hundred stories, or movies, or plays, or radio programs, they are all the same, and the recipient, if he is seeking for truth, goes away unsatisfied.

Why is this? Is America consciously (or unconsciously) trying to ecape the truth? It seems that way. It is not that a certain group of leaders are maliciously trying to keep the truth from the people. Our editors and entertainers merely "give the people what they want," and experience has taught us that what the people want is not good for them. But what difference does it make?

The time is not yet ripe to broadcast pure and unadulterated truth to the people. It would kill them, unprepared as they are for it, just as a man who has spent his days in darkness finds the sunlight blinding. Truth is horrible, painful, revolting. It acts like an emetic; its use in certain cases perhaps is justifiable.

Until the day comes, we shall continue distributing half-truths and truths that are nearly true. We shall never know pure truth says one; but why should that worry us? Civilization is built on falsehoods.

"Nothing Is Too Good"

And then there was the famous labor leader who said that nothing is too good for the workers. Evidently the capitalists believed him for they have given their employees what amounted to less than nothing.

The Strenuous Life

"I wish to teach the doctrine of the strenuous life," quoth Roosevelt; and he thought he had rendered into a philosophy the hurry and scurry of life under capitalism just as Woodrow Wilson, writing about the same time, said "Live by enthusiasm, not by necessity."

In this system one lives strenuously whether he likes it or not, and he can get enthusiastic over such a dilemna or not—that is you can take it, or—you can't.

The One Evil

Flinging one more saying at your head I quote this one by Socrates: "There is only one evil; namely, Ignorance." This ought to wind up the Sayings of Poor Richard for this week. We cannot all be wise; but we can at least inform ourselves. Most of the evils of communism for instance, never happen. The ignorant clothe a word with horror and start with terror at the apparition of their own making. There is only one good: Knowledge.

17,000,000 dead, killed in the World War

And nations preparing for another war which will be immeasurably more horrible than the last. For example, with one poison gas, one hundred planes could cover Chicago with a cloud twenty meters thick and do it within an hour, and sixty minutes thereafter the population of Chicago would be annihilated.

The World Court is a rational, ethical institution for conciliation, arbitration and adjustment in controversial and international affairs. A step to help prevent a horror worse than that of sixteen years ago.

But after all the years of preaching about the Prince of Peace and His Christian teachings the United States has just voted against membership in the World Court; crucified a move to international peace, neighborliness and the practice of Christianity; refusing to be willing to step in and separate two or more maddened nations from tearing, mangling, slaughtering human beings—our brothers.

In the year of our Lord 1935 we have gone on record not for a World Court but for a World War incited by a fear that destroys rather than by a faith that creates a friendly world.

The. World's Greatest Bowmen

Undoubtedly the world's greatest masters of archery are the Tarascans, a tribe of Mexican Indians. With their bows and arrows, many of them can split a grain of wheat at a distance of 30 feet.—Collier's Weekly.

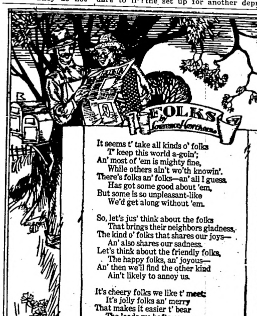
The Shifting of the Credit Burden

By Gilbert A. Brattland,

In past years, more favorable exchange conditions permitted the farmers to accumulate reserves in cash, credit, and property. As this slipping process started, he dragged on his cash, then his credit, then his titles, and now in many instances he has become stripped of them all. Now the Central West has reached an accelerated seepage of titles to the East, the last tangible possession of the farmers. Not the physical properties but the titles to them .

The East long ago woke up to the fact that they had become the credit carriers and that they have assumed the burden of non-surplus producing industries. No one will care to finance a deficit producing business long. They knew that they had to shift the burden. They do not want to also assume the handling of the properties which they have taken on defaulted loans. No individual or corporation is willing to take these burdens over from loaded corporations. They do not dare to liquidate their assets. Therefore they use influence and pressure on the only remaining credit resource able to handle it and that is the State or the national government. This phase is now going on and the government is taking over the burden which amounts to the same thing is shifting the load back upon the people themselves. Note the vast assumptions of credit financing by governmental set ups.

When such an exchange has taken place holders of bonds will bring pressure for the scaling down of such assumed burdens either by compromises or inflation as the borrowers will find themselves unable to pay. Otherwise also such bond issues may go in default. With cheaper money, debtors can pay off their indebtedness at huge discounts. They can repossess their properties at deflated values and then the country is ready for another cycle. In such an event we shall go through a very imaginative prosperity of risnig values. We shall again sow the set up for another depression.



It seems t' take all kinds o' folks
T' keep this world a-goin';
An' most of 'em is mighty fine,
While others ain't wo'th knowin'.
There's folks an' folks—an' all I guess
Has got some good about 'em,
But some is so unpleasant-like
We'd get along without 'em.

So, let's jus' think about the folks
That brings their neighbors gladness,
The kind o' folks that shares our joys—
An' also shares our sadness.
Let's think about the friendly folks,
The happy folks, an' joyous—
An' then we'll find the other kind
Ain't likely to annoy us.

It's cheery folks we like t' meet:
It's jolly folks an' merry
That makes it easier t' bear
The loads we hafta carry.
It's helpful folks an' smilin' folks
That fills us with thanksgivin';
It's friendly folks that makes this world
A better place t' live in.

CONTROL OF GERMAN LABOR SOUGHT BY DR. SCHACHT

Hamberg (TIS)—The division of power between Hitler and Dr. Schacht, Germany's financial master, is achieving definite forms. It is reliably learned that Dr. Schacht is at present working on a plan for a "super ministry" which would control Germany's entire economic economy, commerce, industry, labor as well as finance. The plan will be presented soon to the cabinet for consideration.

Schacht ,who is already supreme in the financial field, is faced with the opposition from the Nazi Ministries of Labor and Agriculture as well as from the German Labor Front. It is, however, only a question of time until the last difficulty is surmounted and D.r Schacht, backed by military forces, will rule Germany as its economic, financial and labor dictator.

Italian Fascism Brands Naziism as Reactionary

Rome, Italy (TIS)—To a labor observer, the attitude of Italian Fascism toward Hitlerism is baffling. It is interesting to note that the Fascists who deprived the Italian workers of all their rights, and subjected them to tyranny, feel quite progressive when compared to the methods used by the Nazis against Labor in Germany.

"Lavoro Fascista," leading Italian Fascist labor paper, in discussing problems of the German Labor Front, makes the following appropriate remarks:

"The questions of production are decided at a place where the Labor Front has nothing to say, that is, in the 'Economic Leadership,' a body exclusively run by the employers. . . We have a huge employers organization which through the power it exercises over production is also in a position to dictate wages. . . . All thi takes place wihtout a corresponding labor organization being able to represent the interests of the workers. . . . It is true that the 'Economic Leadership' has to reckon wtih the State. But it is difficult to see how it can be compatible with social justice that production and the distrbution of what is produced shall be decided in a conversation between employer and State, while the worker passively awaits the outcome. . . It is difficult, if not impossible, to understand how this view can be reconciled with the social equality which it is aimed to establish between the 'manual worker' and the 'brain worker'."

SKIN POWER OF SELF DISINFECTION

HAVE you ever stopped to wonder what a marvelous structure this skin of ours is? It is only one twenty-fifth of an inch thick. Yet it's all the protection we have for the inside of our bodies against the outside world. Unless we're nudists or fan dancers, we cover it with clothes, parts of it. But we all of us occasionally set our bare faces against a 75 mile an hour wind; we go out into cold that is 30 to 50 degrees below zero; on a hot day we move about under a sun that is broiling at 120 degrees, when we can't stand a fever temperature of much over 105 degrees. And we do all sorts of work with our bare hands.

But we still don't know much about this skin of ours. Science has been concerning itself with our bones, our hearts, lungs and other vital organs; it hasn't been giving so very much attention to this thin layer of tissue that keeps our body from drying out.

One thing, however, we have been finding out in the medical research laboratories of the University of Illinois, and that is that our skin is just about the most remarkable disinfecting agent there is. You can put all sorts of germs, millions of them, on clean healthy skin, and in a few minutes they have disappeared.

We discovered, though, that the skin has certain minute never-sterile areas, where the germs don't disappear. The first of these is the area under the finger nails. The second is the thin line that marks the junction of the outside skin of the lip with the membrane lining of the mouth. The third is the line where the outside skin joins the membrane lining of the nostrils. The fourth is the rim of the eyelid where the outside skin meets the inside lining.

The first experiments were made on the outside skin. The university laboratory assistants, all normal, healthy persons, were the subjects. This is how the experiments were conducted. When the chest, abdomen, back, legs or arms were studied, a piece of sterile gauze was moistened with bacterial culture and placed upon the skin area for one to three minutes. Then the gauze was removed and immediately after the skin was rubbed gently with a sterile cotton swab. This swab was then smeared over the surface of an agar plate, and the number of bacteria were counted. In five minutes another sample was taken, and then again in ten, fifteen, twenty, and thirty minutes. When the specimens were taken of the hands, the whole hand was submerged in the bacteria solution, and then specimens taken of the various sections to learn if one section was more resistant than another.

This is what we found: That 98 per cent of the thousands of bacteria that had been placed in contact with the skin disappeared from the skin within ten minutes. That there is one exception to the self-disinfection of the outside skin. This, as has already been stated, is the skin under the nails. Even after the thorough scrubbing and cleaning that the surgeon gives his hands before performing an operation, germs called staphylococci are always present in large numbers in these spaces.

Altogether eleven various kinds of bacteria were used in the tests, from the harmless B.coli to the germs that produce wound infections, lockjaw, boils, blood poisoning, typhoid and dysentery. The skin got rid of the dangerous germs just as quickly as it got rid of those that were harmless.

These tests were on clean skin. Then we experimented with skin coated with fat. Vaseline rubbed into the hands was used in one test. That retarded considerably the self-disinfecting power of the skin. Then naturally oily skin was next swabbed. That also did not work so well.

Finally some plumbers and electricians were called in just as they were finishing their day's work and before they had washed. Their hands were of course grimy. The tests were applied before and after washing, with these results: After 10 minutes the dirty hands showed no reduction of bacteria; the clean hands had lost 85 per cent. After 20 minutes, the dirty hands had lost only 5 per cent of bacteria; the clean hands were entirely free. After 30 minutes the dirty hands still retained 85 per cent of their bacteria.

Next we removed a patch of outside skin to see whether the next layer of skin had the same resistance power. But it hasn't. The second layer of skin tissue has no more germ resisting power than the other tissues of the body. So our only hope of keeping germs out of the body is by keeping our outer layer of skin whole. We lower our resistance to disease when we have a case of sunburn or an open blister, or we get our hands chapped, prick ourselves with a pin, or any other happening that punctures the outermost layer of our epidermis.

A clean, healthy skin needs no other assistance to protect itself against infection.

TruthfulTomatoes

WHEN the teacher asked the third grade to compose poems, one little girl who lisped rose and recited:

"A gooth Tells the truth"

Perhaps this cynical sentiment was her re-action to having just written: "Honesty is the best policy" a hundred times in her copy book. Perhaps she had once followed George Washington's example and confessed unashamedly—with less happy results than the Father of Our Country. Perhaps, as some psychologists tell us, there is no such thing as natural honor in children.

Honor in Vegetables

But of course there is. Even vegetables have natural honor. Take the tomato. It's honest and true no matter where you find it. In the soup, in the salad, in stews, in any dish, you can always count on the tomato's true flavor to speak out frankly.

Some Tomato Recipes

Test the integrity of the tomato in these two tested recipes. The rich, delicious tomato taste shines forth clearly in both of them.

Ripe Olive, Tomato and Cheese Toast: Sauté four tablespoons chopped onion in two tablespoons butter until golden brown. Add the contents of one No. 2½ can of tomatoes, a teaspoon and a half salt, a quarter of a teaspoon pepper, and cook gently five minutes. Add one cup grated cheese and stir until melted. Then add one cup chopped ripe olives. Put layers of crumbs and the tomato mixture alternately in buttered baking dish, having the crumbs on top. Dot with butter, and brown in hot oven for twenty minutes. This serves eight.

Tomatoes with Celery: Cook three-quarters of a cup diced celery and a quarter of a cup green pepper in the contents of one 10-ounce can of tomatoes until tender. Add salt, pepper, half a tablespoon butter, and half a tea spoon sugar. Serve very hot. This serves two.*

Relief Takers to Be Indexed by Occupation

Re-classification of employable persons on the relief rolls thruout the state will be completed before March 1, without any let-up in the activities on work projects. it is announced by Walter F. Mac Gregor, state engineer for the Minnesota SERA.

The survey was recently ordered by the Federal Emergency Relief administration, and is designed to furnish individual records of all employable relief clients, according to their vocations and degrees of skill manifested. This information will guide the work division in its efforts to retore the workers to a more normal life and raise the efficiency standards for the state as a whole.

In the case of tradesmen licensed by the state, the occupation designated in the permit gives the key to the classification, and as to others, the aptitude of each will be disclosed by examinations.

"Disputes arising in this connection will be settled by arbitration committees in each community," the SERA engineer stated.

SERA Aims Outlined
By L. P. Zimmerman

Delegates to the annual convention in St. Paul of the Association of County Commissioners of Minnesota litened attentively while L. P. Zimmerman, acting administrator of the Minnesota SERA explained the rehabilitation aspects of the program.

Mr. Zimmerman devoted a considerable part of his discourse to describe the work-relief program which was devised to offer opportunities to relief clients to earn their living rather than merely receive orders for necessities.

"There is no arguing the point," he said, "that the plan of cash payments for work done is strengthening the self-respect of the workers."

To encourage work-relief, the acting administrator explained, a differential is added to the budgets of those partaking of its benefits, in order to meet extra requirements of food, clothing and transportation for the working men.

In his remarks ,Mr. Zimmeman commended the county commissiener for their whole-hearted co-operation with SERA offices thruout the state, an attitude which he said has helped to make the entire emergency relief program a success.

THE MAN FROM YONDER

Copyright
W.N.U. SERVICE

By Harold Titus

But Duval had nowhere near gotten him; he knew it, and Elliott's manner was infuriating to him. He cursed sharply and spat and jerked at the brim of his slouch hat as he shook loose the peavey and commenced again to birl.

They ran a moment easily, each waiting for the other to try some fresh trick. The Bull leaped and came down running; he leaped four times in the space of as many quick breaths. And then, as though ready to leap again, dropped the hook of his peavey into the cedar. He wavered when the handle, swept upward by the rush and weight of the spinning log, bore against his great palm. His body swung sharply to the left. He cursed as the smooth handle slipped from his clutch and Bird-Eye Blaine danced in a frenzy of delight as the peavey, handle smacking the water, disappeared in the pond and the Bull, waving his arms for balance, ran the log desperately to hold his place.

The odds, then, were no longer equal. Like a fencer with a broken foil, like a boxer with one eye closed, like a runner with a strained tendon, so Duval was now.

"Polish him off, now!" Bird-Eye screamed, like an audacious, saucy boy. "Polish him good, Misther Elliott! He's yawpin' for help 'nd the' ain't none fer him!"

That was what Tincup believed. A quick finish seemed certain, with the Bull so handicapped, without his peavey for offensive moves or to hold for balance.

But what happened stilled the clamor quickly. Ben Elliott shifted his peavey. He had held it across his body, arms wide spread. Now he swung the point upward and outward and as he ran the spinning log drew it back and tossed it toward shore. Tossed it high and far, sending with it his chance for a quick and certain victory.

The silence was that of amazement. This was like letting a man you had knocked down get to his feet and have another chance; this was opportunity handed to truculent Bull Duval on a silver platter. This was the sportsmanship one read about . . . And then came an excited clatter of tongues, rising to an even greater roar. The outsider was through fooling, through with trickery and through with strategy. He was going to run the Bull off his feet!

Fast and faster spun the log. Spray from it drenched the men to their knees, rained behind them into the pond.

The log was hissing in the water. Rigidity ran from the Bull's shoulders down his back. He was upright, now, where Elliott was poised forward. And his scowl was gone. His brows no longer gathered but were upraised; his eyes were wide open in the distress of fatigue and he breathed through his mouth.

Thought of the rules swept the crowd, because Duval was edging to the right. He moved slowly, awkwardly, at the cost of great effort, on toward the center of the log. Was he trying one more trick? Not likely. A man under such a strain does not attempt strategy . . . not fair strategy. As he progressed an inch at a time Elliott countered by also creeping toward the center so his end might not dip beneath the surface.

Both men had their arms extended and Elliott's grin had faded to a sort of curious smile, a speculative alertness . . . Close and closer they came together and then, as their extended hands were all but touching, Duval suddenly flecked his right wrist in a pass at Elliott's left hand.

"Ah, th' dirty—" But Bird-Eye's high scream was cut short by an ominous roar. The Bull, facing defeat, had overstepped all rules. The slightest touch on the other's body would upset his balance, now, and after Elliott had proven himself above taking what was even recognized as a fair advantage, the last vestige of loyalty to town or whatever it was which had put men on Duval's side was whisked away.

On Duval's face was ruthlessness along with the flush of fatigue and humiliation. He would be the last man on that log, though disqualified for any prize. At any cost he would stay on that log.

But would he? Elliott, a steely quality coming into his grin, retreated until he was out of the other's reach. He loosed the last reservoir of his energy and by the way his feet flickered and clawed and spurned that log one might well have believed that until now he had only played with this crowned king of the river that flowed past Tincup.

Watchers felt their middles aching as they followed those straining contestants. Again the Bull sought to strike Elliott's extended hand and missed by inches. His left hand raised jerkily, up and up. His body tilted. His great torso was twisting, wrenching at the hips, and, seeing this, Elliott leaped high, came down running, sent water sloshing back and forth the length of the stick until with a throaty cry of rage and humiliation, of hatred and jealousy, the great Bull, missing a stride, went sideways and backward, disappeared beneath the surface of the pond with a mighty splash and came up blowing and shaking his black thatched head.

Hats went into the air, then, along with yips and yells and enthusiastic oaths as Ben Elliott, panting heavily, brought the log to a stop and, hands on his knees, stood blowing and grinning and watched the man whose title he had taken swim for the broom sticks.

The Bull slunk quickly toward the boiler room of the mill, water streaming from his pants and sleeves. The pond man threw out his pike pole and brought the cedar log to shore and there Birney, the announcer and master of ceremonies, greeted Elliott with a clap on the back and, with the other hand, thrust a roll of currency at him.

"Here's your money and you sure deserve it!" he cried, close in Ben's ear to make himself heard. "You'd got it on a foul, anyhow. Better this way!"

Others surged around the victor and Elliott accepted this homage modestly.

"Luck!" he said to one enthusiastic well-wisher. "I got the breaks in luck."

"Luck be domned!" shrilled Bird-Eye. "I'll lick any mon aye me own old or me heavy who says 'twas luck! You got stuff, me b'y; you got guts!"

"Thanks, chum!" Elliott laughed. "I hope you don't find me out!"

He shouldered his way slowly to his pack-sack and, surrounded by his admirers, with Bird-Eye in the fore, changed to his shoes again. He looked about for Don Stuart, craning his neck to see over the crowd which was now moving up toward Tincup's main thoroughfare.

"Who ye mean?" Bird-Eye asked. "Owld Donny?"

"Yeah. Stuart. The old duffer's broke, on top of being sick, and I want to look out for him."

A man at his elbow said cautiously:

"I'm afeerd old Don won't do much visitin' in Tincup." Bird-Eye turned to him inquiringly and the man nodded. "Brandon. He found him here while th' birlin' was goin' on. He's likely made other arrangements."

"Th' dirty stinker!" Bird-Eye said beneath his breath. "So he's drivin' him out already, is he? Well, th' low down—"

"Who's driving who out?" Elliott asked.

"Misther Brandon. Americky moight be a free country but Tincup ain't in it, thin. Owld Donny ain't welcome here 'nd 't's likely he's got his orders to meve on."

Elliott hitched his pack-sack a bit higher.

"What's this? Orders? What's wrong with him? Seemed like a harmless old gaffer to me. Bent on coming to Tincup, too; wanted it like a little kid wants candy. Got my goat. . . . Who's going to run him off?"

Bird-Eye had hopped nimbly to a log from which point he could see across bobbing heads.

"Ah-ha!" he exclaimed. "Sure, it's Misther Brandon hisself who's a-runnin' owld Donny off!"

Elliott craned his neck and could see, half-way to the depot, two men on the sidewalk. One was his companion in travel earlier that day; the other a man he had not seen before. The latter had Don Stuart by one arm but that contact was not the friendly assistance which Ben had offered the old fellow. As Elliott looked, the feeble old man tried to draw away, but the other was insistent, scarcely hesitated in his progress toward the station.

"Train west's due now," Bird-Eye said. "Sure, 'nd pore owld Donny, he'll be a passenger. It's a cryin' shame, kapin' him away from Tincup so!"

Elliott started forward, Bird-Eye at his heels, crossing the street, leaping to the high board sidewalk and swinging on.

He overtook the two he followed just in time to hear Stuart gasp:

"—ain't long to . . . live, Nick. I'd like . . . stay here. . . . Ain't pleasant to . . . be sick and not . . . among friends."

"Never mind," the other said as one might to a protesting child. "I've told you any number of times to stay away."

On this reply Elliott moved abreast of the man.

"Hello, old timer!" he said, addressing Stuart. "Going some place?"

He did not look at the man said to be Nicholas Brandon. His manner on the question was almost casual.

"Oh . . . hello," Dan panted. "I . . . Mister Brandon, here . . . won't let me . . . stay."

Then Elliott looked at Brandon. A man of undetermined age; not old, neither young. Powerfully built, with a peculiarly white face and eyes as black as night. These eyes bored into Elliott's now, keenly, intelligently, with the look of a man who is accustomed to gauging others without delay or hesitation.

"Oh, this man doesn't want you to stay!" Ben said softly. And then with a smile, to Brandon: "I sort of took the old timer under my wing today. He wants to stay here quite badly. I'll look after him."

"There's no place for him here," Brandon said positively. "Come, Stuart, it's almost train time."

He twitched at the old man's arm but Ben broke in, brow wrinkled as if he wanted to handle a perplexing matter fairly.

"Well, now, say! No place? Suppose a place was made for him a few days? I'd sort of planned on that. There's a hotel here, and I'd be willing to—"

"I don't know you," Brandon interrupted and irritability crept into his voice. "I've never even seen you. I've known this man for years. He's an old employee of mine. This is my affair. I never have others, especially strangers, meddling."

A low whisper came from Stuart and Ben rubbed his chin with one knuckle.

"Yeah. I am butting in, I guess. But . . . You see, the old timer told me a little about himself. He's been lonesome a long time, I take it. He's not what you'd call in robust health. I figure that if I was in his shape I'd like to be with a few old friends myself and if—"

In the distance a train whistled and on the sound Brandon's eyes snapped.

"I've no time to argue my affairs," he said sharply. "Come, Stuart."

"But, Nick! See . . . here, Nick . . I'll never get back . . . again. It's lonesome, bein' sick . . alone, where you can't . . . Nick! You're . . . hurting my wrist!"

He winced from the grasp and on that the last shadow of a smile went out of Ben Elliott's face. He put himself squarely before Brandon.

"Let him go," he said quietly, but his look drove hard into those black eyes.

The man hesitated and flushed.

"If you aren't looking for trouble," he said, voice edged with wrath, "you'll keep out of this!"

"Fair enough. But unless you've got a better reason than I know about, let the old timer alone! Let go of his wrist!" he added sharply, as Stuart winced again.

"I'll thank you to keep out of—"

"Let—go—his—wrist, you d—d bully!"

He had grasped Brandon's forearm with both hands, letting his pack slip to the sidewalk. The clutch on Don Stuart's arm loosened. With a snarl Brandon drew back and swung for Ben's jaw. Elliott ducked, swayed forward and bending his supple body caught Brandon about the middle, drove his head into the man's chest, raised a knee to his groin, lifted him from his feet, swung, shoved and flung him free.

With a sharp oath Brandon went down in the half-thawed mire of the street, sprawling ignominiously on his back.

SUBMITS PLAN FOR R. CREDIT WINDUP

(4) Rental of all land, until sold, at 4 per cent of the new valuation payable in the fall, and secured by cash crops.

(5) First right, for a certain time to former owners to repurchase their land by paying the interest in advance for one year and thereafter in advance each year at 3 per cent interest.

(6) Provision made in the law for refinancing by selling certificates guaranteed by the state, direct to the people as an investment at 2½ per cent interest annually.

Mr. Brattland has laid his plan before a number of farmers, business men and civic leaders and finds that it receives hearty endorsement. The Roseau County Farmers Holiday association is already taking hold of the proposition and intends to push it with vigor, reports from that county states. Many letters from various parts of the state has been received by Mr. Brattland urging him to go to St. Paul and push the proposition before the lawmakers and as a result of these requests and the great number of assurances for help and cooperation in the work Mr. Brattland is leaving for the capital this week.

NERSTRAND FOREST AREA.

The acquisition of the Nerstrand "Big Woods" in Rice county for state park purposes has been taken unler official consideration by the Minnesota SERA according to Walter F. MacGregor, state engineer and head of the work division.

Boundaries of the forest will be determined and options of tracts taken by the state, preparatory to appraisal of the cast of the project.

The move to preserve, intact, this last remnant of what was once a hardwood area covering almost all of southwestern Minnesota was sponsored by sportsmen's organizations and civic associations in communities adjacent to the forest area. It also was recommended to the SERA by the state conservation commission which, in a resolution, asserted that the Nerstrand woods deserved to be saved as a public domain for future generations of nature lovers.

GOODRIDGE MAN REFUTES HIGH PAY AT FERGUS CLAIM

	Lbs. butter mfg for 1933	Net Price received for butter	Net price paid for butterfat	Gain	Loss

Thief River Falls—
	317,859	19.95	19.28	83.36

In analyzing these figures I find that there is only a slight difference in the prices received for butter by the three creameries but why should it be necessary for a creamery having a volume of over a million pounds of butter annually, as in the case of Pelican Rapids, to show a loss on all operations of nearly $4,000.00 in order to be able to compete with the smaller Land O' Lakes creameries referred to in the bove report. It can readily be seen from the above figures that the lower price paid for butterfat by the local creamery was not due to a lower priee received for its butter, but due chiefly to lack of volume.

I also have figures from the other creameries referred to, but feel that it is unnecessary to make further comment.

Yours for more co-operation,
Lloyd A. Nelson,

BATTLE RAGES ON RELIEF MEASURES

$1,000,000 relief bill, and was joined by other conservatives, liberal battlers leaped to their feet The fight was on.

Conservatives insisted that the drouth measure would be passed at once because of the urgent need of farmers in the drouth areas, and that the remaining $10,000,000 in relief appropriations should be delayed until an investigation is made of the entire administration of relief in the state.

Liberals argued that a worthwhile investigation of the relief setup could not be completed in a short time, that delay in the adoption of the administration bill would jeopardize the whole federal aid program, and that delay on the larger appopriation would work a hardship on many thousands of people outside of the drouth area who are dependent on relief.

Lead Conservative Fight

Leaders in the fight for the conservatives included Rep. Anderson George MacKinnon of Minneapolis T. .E. Brophy of Minneapolis, J R. Sweitder of St. Paul, Harry L Wahlstrand of Willmar, and Mrs Hannah Kempfer of Erhard. The liberals' end of the debate was led by Rep. Barker of Elbow Lake Lewis Herfindahl of Benson, Carl J. .Eastvold of Ortonville, Roy Wier of Minneapolis and others.

As the debate raged on it became apparent that the conservatives would not be able to muster the 88 votes—two thirds— necessary for passage of the bill under suspension of the rules. One notable defection was that of Rep. R. J. Julkowski of Minneapolis. who voted with the conservatives on organization. He opposed the move outspokenly.

Finally a roll call on the Anderson motion was averted when Rep. Henry Horowitz, conservative of St. Paul, moved an adjournment after loud cries of "roll call" had filled the chamber. A roll call on the motion to adjourn brought 71 votes for adjournment. On this test the conservatives were far short of the required 88 votes and 11 behind the vote they received on organization of the House, when George W. Johnson received 82 votes for speaker.

Fight Committee's Selections

Senate liberals attacked the eleven-man committee c hosen by the conservative Committee on Committees to investigate state departments. Senator Victor E. Lawson, of Willmar, one of those named on the committee opened the fight by charging that the liberals were not accorded a fair representation inasmuch as there were only two Farmer-Laborites and one independents in the group He demanded that the report be sent back to the Committee on Committees with instructions to leave the selection of four members to the president of the Senate. Senator Lawson served notice that he wousd refuse to serve if the liberals did not get a fair representation. Senator George Siegel of St. Paul, said the investigation committee heavily weighted with anti-administration conservatives gave the whole investigation called for by the resolution of Senator James A. Carley of Plainview, the appearanre of political persecution. Senator Patrick Farnand of Hibbing, said the investigating committe e was unfair because it gave the conservatives six lawyers and the liberals only one.

At one point Senators George H. Sullivan, Stillwater, conservative leader, and George H. Lommen of Eveleth, liberal leader, engaged in a sharp verbal battle on the floor.

Henrepin county members who had voted with the conservatives on organization demanded that their county be represented.

When it appeared that a roll call might show some defections from the conservative ranks, Senators A. J. Rockne of Zumbrota and Charles N. Orr, of St. Paul conservative leaders, urged that the report of the Committee on Committees be referred to the committee.

Committee List Revised

The report went back to the committee and the next day Thursday, the committee submitted a revised list for the inquisitorial body as follows: Senators James A. Carley, chairman; A. L. Ahren ,Balaton, O. J. Finstad Windom;Burt L. Kingsley, Minneapolis, Milton Lightner, St. Paul; D. D. Murphy, Blue Earth; A. J. Rockne, Zmbrota; and H. H .Sullivan, St. Cloud, Conservatives; and Richard Gardner, Staples; William Dietz, Montgomery, and Patrick Farnand, liberals. Senator Kingsley was substituted for Senator H. C. Stiening of Moorhead, who was on the original list and Senator Farnand replaced Senator Lawson.

In the vote on the final selections, Senator Arvid Ruotsinoja of Kimball, who voted with the conservatives on organization of the Senate, swung over to the liberals' side and voted against the selections of the Committee on Committees. However, the committee's slate went through, 42 to 24.

Dispute Tax Figures

The tax committees of the Senate and House sat in joint meeting Wednesday to hear discussions on the bill for a gross receipts tax introduced by Senators M. R. Cashman of Owatonna, Carley, and William L. Roepke of Faribault Several proponents of the measure spoke, including Senator Cashman Mayor Edgar Hayek of Albert Lea. as president of the Minnesota Association for Tax Justice; Roland Olson, assistant to Walter E. Olson of St. Paul, secretary of the association; and Robert L. Carley St. Paul, secretary of the Northern Building and Loan Association and treasurer of the Minnesota Association for Tax Justice.

All the speakers expressed a hope of finding in this tax a means of lifting the tax burden off real estate. Proponents of the Cashman bill contend that the gross receipts tax could raise $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 a year to serve as a replacement for real estate taxes. Howeves considerable dispute arose on this point, as it was pointed out that the Minnesota Institute of Governmental research which has made a study of various sales taxes, estimate that only about $12,000,000 could be raised by a one half per cent gross receipts tax as advocated in this bill.

Would Tax Co-operatives

In the course of the discussion Mayor Hayek revealed that it is the porpose of the sponsors of the bill that the tax shall be levied on co-operative enterprises as well as others.

Another piece of legislation relating to taxes is the concurrent resolution which would ask Congress to deprive the states of the right to levy income taxes. I' proposed national legislation giving Congress this right exclusively, and authorizing Congress to tax all forms of securities of the United States, the separate states and other political subdivisions. Its authors are Senators G. H Sullivan, D. D. Murphy and Cashman.

Rep. Joseph A. Coduti of Hibbing, a new House member, is the only Italian-American member ever to serve in that body.

Cold Wave Brings Crisis In Dispensing of Aid

The protracted spell of severe cold weather is placing an undue strain upon the facilities of the Minnesota SERA and has called forth from L. P. Zimmerman, acting administrator, warning of inability on the part of the adminis tration to cope with the altered situation, unless local communities increase their contributions of food and clothing.

The relief load for December increased by 10,000 cases, and an equal number will probably be added during January," Mr. Zimmerman added.

"All budget items have been subjected to deep cuts to prepare for the needs of which we had cognizance," the acting administrator explained.

"Resources are not available to grant the mounting requests that are swamping every relief office in the state. All fedeal relief funds for January have been allocated and no additional burdens can be assumed by the SERA until the February grant has been received. Therefore, to alleviate hardships caused by the sub-zero weather and lack of fuel and warm bedding in many homes, it is incumbent upon local government units to assist in a generous manner, if serious suffering is not to result."

Tossing Money to Devil

Among the Chinese the easiest and most popular way to get rid of a personal devil is to buy a handful of money and toss it to the winds. It is assumed that the devils, being both selfish and ignorant, follow in hot pursuit.

Number Suspended Licenses is Growing

The number of revoked and suspended motor vehicle operator's licenses continues to mount as shown in a report made Monday by Gil Carmichael, Director of the Drivers License Division, St. Paul.

This report shows that during the month of January there were reported to the division by the various courts throughout the state 618 convictions for traffic law violations. Of this number, 578 were men and 40 convictions were of women. These convictions, resulted in 53 drivers licenses being revoked, 44 of this number being for drunken driving. These convictions also resulted in 13 motor vehicle operators having their licenses suspended for varying periods of time depending upon the nature of their offense. Most of these were suspended for reckless or careless driving.

During this same period there were 46 convictions received on unlicensed drivers and 33 convictions were licensed chauffeurs.

Since the Driver's License law became effective on March 1, 1934, there have been reported to the Division and charged to the individual operator's records, 7,212 convictions for traffic law violations.

To date the Drivers License Division has revoked and suspended 1084 drivers' licenses.

Nazi Labor Paper Speaks the Truth

Berlin (TIS)—The "Deutsche," official organ of the German Labor Front, which ceased publication at the beginning of 1935, has made its exit with an article entitled "Mass, Man or Personality?". Among other things, quite at variance with Nazi ideas, the article said:

"The ruthlessly suppressed masses are merely the instrument for these tyrants, who do not regard them as differing in any way from dead matter. Calculations are made with the 'mass man' just as calculations are made with machinery, goods, construction. Man is a cipher, he is just one particle of an immense machine. He is not allowed a will of his own. The will belongs to the dictator. The mass man is not allowed to create or to strive for progress, for the dictator alone decides whether he shall go forward or be submerged."

Those who believe that the article is directed against German Nazi methods are mistaken. The paper was not talking about Germany, but about Russia. It is characteristic of the blindness prevailing in Germany today, that the writer did not see that his arguments applied with more than equal force to the German dictatorship.

(4) Rental of all land, until sold, at 4 per cent of the new valuation payable in the fall, and secured by cash crops.

(5) First right, for a certain time to former owners to repurchase their land by paying the interest in advance for one year and thereafter in advance each year at 3 per cent interest.

(6) Provision made in the law for refinancing by selling certificates guaranteed by the state, direct to the people as an investment at 2½ per cent interest annually.

Mr. Brattland has laid his plan before a number of farmers, business men and civic leaders and finds that it receives hearty endorsement. The Roseau County Farmers Holiday association is already taking hold of the proposition and intends to push it with vigor, reports from that county states. Many letters from various parts of the state has been received by Mr. Brattland urging him to go to St. Paul and push the proposition before the lawmakers and as a result of these requests and the great number of assurances for help and cooperation in the work Mr. Brattland is leaving for the capital this week.

NERSTRAND FOREST AREA.

Boundaries of the forest will be determined and options of tracts taken by the state, preparatory to appraisal of the cast of the project.

The move to preserve, intact, this last remnant of what was once a hardwood area covering almost all of southwestern Minnesota and was sponsored by sportsmen's organizations and civic associations in communities adjacent to the forest area. It also was recommended to the SERA by the state conservation commission which, in a resolution, asserted that the Nerstrand woods deserved to be saved as a public domain for future generations of nature lovers.

GOODRIDGE MAN REFUTES HIGH PAY AT FERGUS CLAIM

	Lbs. butter mfg for 1933	Net Price received for butter	Net price paid for butterfat	Gain	Loss

	317,859	19.95	19.28	83.36

In analyzing these figures I find that there is only a slight difference in the prices received for butter by the three creameries but why should it be necessary for a creamery having a volume of over a million pounds of butter annually, as in the case of Pelican Rapids, to show a loss on all operations of nearly $4,000.00 in order to be able to compete with the smaller Land O' Lakes creameries referred to in the bove report. It can readily be seen from the above figures that the lower price paid for butterfat by the local creamery was not due to a lower price received for its butter, but due chiefly to lack of volume.

I also have figures from the other creameries referred to, but feel that it is unnecessary to make further comment.

Yours for more co-operation,
Lloyd A. Nelson,

$1,000,000 relief bill, and was joined by other conservatives, liberal battlers leaped to their feet. The fight was on.

Conservatives insisted that the drouth measure would be passed at once because of the urgent need of farmers in the drouth areas, and that the remaining $10,000,000 in relief appropriations should be delayed until an investigation is made of the entire administration of relief in the state.

Liberals argued that a worthwhile investigation of the relief setup could not be completed in a short time, that delay in the adoption of the administration bill would jeopardize the whole federal aid program, and that delay on the larger appopriation would work a hardship on many thousands of people outside of the drouth area who are dependent on relief.

Lead Conservative Fight

Leaders in the fight for the conservatives included Rep. Anderson George MacKinnon of Minneapolis J. E. Brophy of Minneapolis, J R. Sweitder of St. Paul, Harry L Wahlstrand of Willmar, and Mrs Hannah Kempfer of Erhard. The liberals' end of the debate was led by Rep. Barker of Elbow Lake Lewis Herfindahl of Benson, Carl J. Eastvold of Ortonville, Roy Wier of Minneapolis and others.

As the debate raged on it became apparent that the conservatives would not be able to muster the 88 votes—two thirds— necessary for passage of the bill under suspension of the rules. One notable defection was that of Rep. R. J. Julkowski of Minneapolis, who voted with the conservatives on organization. He opposed the move outspokenly.

Finally a roll call on the Anderson motion was averted when Rep. Henry Horowitz, conservative of St. Paul, moved an adjournment after loud cries of "roll call" had filled the chamber. A roll call on the motion to adjourn brought 71 votes for adjournment. On this test the conservatives were far short of the required 88 votes and 11 behind the vote they received on organization of the House, when George W. Johnson received 82 votes for speaker.

Fight Committee's Selections

Senate liberals attacked the eleven-man committee chosen by the conservative Committee on Committees to investigate state departments. Senator Victor E. Lawson, of Willmar, one of those named on the committee opened the fight by charging that the liberals were not accorded a fair representation inasmuch as there were only two Farmer-Laborites and one independents in the group He demanded that the report be sent back to the Committee on Committees with instructions to leave the selection of four members to the president of the Senate. Senator Lawson served notice that he would refuse to serve if the liberals did not get a fair representation. Senator George Siegel of St. Paul, said the investigation committee heavily weighted with anti-administration conservatives gave the whole investigation called for by the resolution of Senator James A. Carley of Plainview, the appearanre of political persecution. Senator Patrick Farnand of Hibbing, said the investigating committee was unfair because it gave the conservatives six lawyers and the liberals only one.

At one point Senators George H. Sullivan, Stillwater, conservative leader, and George H. Lommen of Eveleth, liberal leader, engaged in a sharp verbal battle on the floor.

Hennepin county members who had voted with the conservatives on organization demanded that their county be represented.

When it appeared that a roll call might show some defections from the conservative ranks, Senators A. J. Rockne of Zumbrota and Charles N. Orr, of St. Paul conservative leaders, urged that the report of the Committee on Committees be referred to the committee.

Committee List Revised

The report went back to the committee and the next day Thursday, the committee submitted a revised list for the inquisitorial body as follows: Senators James A. Carley, chairman; A. L. Ahren, Balaton, O. J. Finstad, Windom; Burt L. Kingsley, Minneapolis, Milton Lightner, St. Paul; D. D. Murphy, Blue Earth; A. J. Rockne, Zmbrota; and H. H. Sullivan, St. Cloud, Conservatives; and Richard Gardner, Staples; William Dietz, Montgomery, and Patrick Farnand, liberals. Senator Kingsley was substituted for Senator H. C. Stiening of Moorhead, who was on the original list and Senator Farnard replaced Senator Lawson.

In the vote on the final selections, Senator Arvid Ruotsinoja of Kimball, who voted with the conservatives on organization of the Senate, swung over to the liberals' side and voted against the selections of the Committee on Committees. However, the committee's slate went through, 42 to [illegible]

Dispute Tax Figures

The tax committees of the Senate and House sat in joint meeting Wednesday to hear discussions on the bill for a gross receipts tax introduced by Senators M. R. Cashman of Owatonna, Carley, and William L. Roepke of Faribault Several proponents of the measure spoke, including Senator Cashman Mayor Edgar Hayek of Albert Lea, as president of the Minnesota Association for Tax Justice; Roland Olson, assistant to Walter E. Olson of St. Paul, secretary of the association; and Robert L. Carley St. Paul, secretary of the Northern Building and Loan Association and treasurer of the Minnesota Association for Tax Justice.

All the speakers expressed a hope of finding in this tax a means of lifting the tax burden off real estate. Proponents of the Cashman bill contend that the gross receipts tax could raise $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 a year to serve as a replacement for real estate taxes. Howeves considerable dispute arose on this point, as it was pointed out that the Minnesota Institute of Governmental research which has made a study of various sales taxes, estimate that only about $12,000,000 could be raised by a one half per cent gross receipts tax as advocated in this bill.

Would Tax Co-operatives

In the course of the discussion Mayor Hayek revealed that it is the porpose of the sponsors of the bill that the tax shall be levied on co-operative enterprises as well as others.

Another piece of legislation relating to taxes is the concurrent resolution which would ask Congress to deprive the states of the right to levy income taxes. It proposed national legislation giving Congress this right exclusively, and authorizing Congress to tax all forms of securities of the United States, the separate states and other political subdivisions. Its authors are Senators G. H Sullivan, D. D. Murphy and Cashman.

Rep. Joseph A. Coduti of Hibbing, a new House member, is the only Italian-American member ever to serve in that body.

Cold Wave Brings Crisis In Dispensing of Aid

The protracted spell of severe cold weather is placing an undue strain upon the facilities of the Minnesota SERA and has called forth from L. P. Zimmerman, acting administrator, warning of in[illegible] on the part of the adminis[illegible] to cope with the [illegible] situation, unless local communities increase their contributions of food and clothing.

The relief load for December increased by 10,000 cases, and an equal number will probably be added during January," Mr. Zimmerman added.

"All budget items have been subjected to deep cuts to prepare for the needs of which we had cognizance," the acting administrator explained.

"Resources are not available to grant the mounting requests that are swamping every relief office in the state. All fedeal relief funds for January have been allocated and no additional burdens can be assumed by the SERA until the February grant has been received. Therefore, to alleviate hardships caused by the sub-zero weather and lack of fuel and warm bedding in many homes, it is incumbent upon local government units to assist in a generous manner, if serious suffering is not to result."

Tossing Money to Devil

Among the Chinese the easiest and most popular way to get rid of a personal devil is to buy a handful of money and toss it to the winds. It is assumed that the devils, being both selfish and ignorant, follow in hot pursuit.

Number Sus[illegible] Licenses is Growing

The number of revoked and suspended motor vehicle operator's licenses continues to mount as shown in a report made Monday by Gil Carmichael, Director of the Drivers License Division, St. Paul.

This report shows that during the month of January there were reported to the division by the various courts throughout the state 618 convictions for traffic law violations. Of this number, 578 were men and 40 convictions were of women. These convictions resulted in 53 drivers licenses being revoked, 44 of this number being for drunken driving. These convictions also resulted in 13 motor vehicle operators having their licenses suspended for varying periods of time depending upon the nature of their offense. Most of these were suspended for reckless or careless driving.

During this same period there were 46 convictions received on unlicensed drivers and 33 convictions were licensed chauffeurs.

Since the Driver's License law became effective on March 1, 1934, there have been reported to the Division and charged to the individual operator's records, 7,212 convictions for traffic law violations.

To date the Drivers License Division has revoked and suspended 1084 drivers' licenses.

Nazi Labor Paper Speaks the Truth

Berlin (TIS)—The "Deutsche," official organ of the German Labor Front, which ceased publication at the beginning of 1935, has made its exit with an article entitled "Mass, Man or Personality?" Among other things, quite at variance with Nazi ideas, the article said:

"The ruthlessly suppressed masses are merely the instrument for these tyrants, who do not regard them as differing in any way from dead matter, Calculations are made with the 'mass man' just as calculations are made with machinery, goods, construction. Man is a cipher, he is just one particle of an immense machine. He is not allowed a will of his own. The will belongs to the dictator. The mass man is not allowed to create or to strive for progress, for the dictator alone decides whether he shall go forward or be submerged."

Those who believe that the article is directed against German Nazi methods are mistaken. The paper was not talking about Germany, but about Russia. It is characteristic of the blindness prevailing in Germany today, that the writer did not see that his arguments applied with more than equal force to the German dictatorship.

ATHLETIC SHOW THRILLS LARGE AUDIENCE TUES.

Norquist Throws Radniecki Two Out of Three; Will Meet Again

By Rip Snorter

Promoter Bill LaFave presented a bank-up card at the athletic show in the Old Elks hall on Tuesday evening. Six matches were presented with a fast wrestling windup between Tex Norquist of Thief River Falls and Stanley Radniecki of Oklee which went to Nordquist who took the first and third fall. Both boys are fast, young, and with considerable experience. Both are stocky and powerful Tex weighing about 158 and Stanley 170 pounds. Tex took the first fall with a cross body lock in nine minutes; Stanley the second with a body lock in five minutes and Tex returned takeing the third with an arm scissor in seven minutes. The match was marred a little by too much Tex Rickard stuff by Norquist.

The first preliminary brought out a little fistic argument between Young Tripp of Thief River Falls and Young Radniecki of Oklee, weighing 114 and 123 pounds respectively. They mixed it merrily for two rounds with Tripp apparently having the edge as the second session ended.

Sailor Cantfield of Thief River Falls (148) met Wedul of Hazel (148) in another fisticuff for the second preliminary. Wedul ought to keep his mits up or he may have something hit him on the button suddenlike, but he mixes it manfully and is willing to take it.

Lloyd Tommerdahl was to meet Bill Lang of Williston, N. D., but was unable to appear because of a cold and Rex Johnson of Thief River Falls substituted for him Bill Lang's experience told in this match and Johnson was rather second best but trying hard and putting up a good battle.

Two Hagen boys from Gatzke proved to up-and-a-coming artists in the manly art. Ralph Hagen (175) who met Moe of Thief River Falls showed a rapier-like left hand that seemed to be hanging limp at his side but could reach the other fellow's visage something faster than quick. We'd say he won the bout by a couple of lefts.

Oscar Hagen met Louis Johnson of Thief River Falls and proved to be able to put on an awful rough party. He threw a million groves, (a cool million. Count 'em) at his opponent and no matter where they came from they appeared to be loaded with dynamite, for there was an explosion when they connected. Johnson with his arms outstretched is just half as long as across the ring (he measured it three times.)

It was a good show and all the youngsters worked hard to please the audience which packed the hall from wall to wall. Bill La Fave promises another good card for Tuesday February 26th and the lineup he announced should pack the hall again at that time The boys are young and learn fast The next two weeks should do wonders for their form and performance. Bill Lang will meet Marcus Olson of Thief River Falls in a six round mixup with the gloves: Oscar Hagen will meet Lloyd Tommerdahl and Tex Norquist and Stanley Radniecki will tangle in the grunt and groan game again. Geo. Radick will box Young Cody and Bill LaFave wants someone to take on Ted Berggren of Thief River Falls (please don't all speak at once boys) at the next show.

And if you have glass eyes you better park them at home, 'cause this show will knock 'em out and they might fall in the soup.

Registration of Autos Continues 'til March 15

According to an announcement received by A. Campbell this week, the time has been extended to March 15th for the application for registration of motor vehicles. Payment of license fees without penalty will be accepted up to that date. License plates for 1934 which are in the name of the owner of the car may be used until the deadline is reached. This action by the legislature was taken in order to give them time to decide whether or not the license rate should be kept on at the old rate or to allow a special reduction again for the coming two years.

Twin Valley Loses 37 to 15 to L. H. S.

Friday evening the Prowlers defeated the Crookston high school team 31 to 24 at the auditorium in one of the hardest games the locals have played this year. With the downfall of Crookston the locals have beaten every team in this district and will play no more games at home from the district until the district tournament which will be held here in March Mickelson was high socrer for the local bunch with five field goals and for Crookston Panzer led the scoring with six points.

Twin Valley was sent home on the short end of a 37 to 15 score Tuesday night and brightened the outlook of the Prowlers for another shot at the state basket-ball title which they captured in 1931 Every strong contender for the regional title has been defeated by the Prowlers this season and it is hoped by the boys that they will be able to repeat during the district and regional tournaments The Twin Valley quint won second place in the region last year and returned with an all veteran outfit which failed to impress the fans as being very strong against the local boys Tuesday.

DISCUSS WAYS FOR HANDLING LAND RENTALS

Meeting of County Officials At Warren Would Amend Tax Laws

Representatives fro all the counties in the Fourtenth Judicial District met at Warren on Thursday February 7, to discuss, and if possible devise a method of handling rentals of tax delinquent lands in an orderly and legal manner.

Changes in the la wwas unanimously declared necessary, and it was the consensus of opinion that the present law is unworkable now that the volume of this business has grown so large. It wa also established that the county attorneys have no authority under the present laws to undertake this work, and can in fact not do it legally.

A committee of seven was selected to draw an amendment to the present laws which will be submitted to the legislature which will empower the county board, if it should see fit, to appoint a "Land Rental Agent" in the County Auditor's office to take charge of the rental of tax delinquent real estate. The committee is composed of H. L. Fowler, county auditor and H. O. Berve, county attorne of this county; A. A. Trost, county attorney of Marshall county; Mr. Stadsvold, county attorney an Mr. Welte, county auditor of Polk county; Mr. Wilson, county attorney of Mahnomen county; and Mr Knutson, county attorney of Roseau county.

March on Capitol Planned By Unemployed Workers

A movement is under way to hold a State Unemployment Insurance Congress in St. Paul March ninth, tenth and eleventh. It is planned that a march on the State Capitol will be staged at one p. m Monday, March 11, to demand legislation to enable the unemployed to maintain a decent standard of living. The bill being backed by this group is one similar to the Lundeen's Workers' Insurance Bill which has been introduced in congress by Cong. Ernest Lundeen and is sponsored by Representative W. F. Bennett, liberal member from Hennepin county; the bill is known as House File 120.

For the convenience of those who are required to file federal income tax returns, a deputy collector of internal revenue will be at the local post office on Feb. 18-19-20.

He will be here for the purpose of assisting taxpayers and no charge is made for his services, postmaster Andy Anderson states.

Signing of Corn-Hog Contracts for 1935 Will be Simpler Says Douglass

Signing up in the corn-hog program will be simpler and easier this year.

Results of a year's experience with the 1934 corn-hog program are seen in the simplified forms and the simplicity of the proposed procedure for arranging the contract for old contract signers.

County agent R. M Douglas says the general procedure for producers whose circumstances or location have not changed since 1934 consists mainly in transferring adjusted figures from the old contract to the new and submitting it to the producer for his signature.

In the case of the 1934 signer who has moved to a new farm or otherwise altered his farming unit or where conditions have arisen which call for a change in the corn or hog base, the cooperator at the time of making application for a contract will fill out a work sheet, giving full details of these changes. From this information the applicant's permitted corn acreage and hog production in 1935 and his benefit payments will be computed.

For the applicant who did not take part in the 1934 program. the application and contract will be handled similar to those of old signers whose corn or hog bases must be redetermined.

The schedule of sign-up meetings, as determined by the corn-hog committees and the county agent, will be as follows:

County Board to Hire A Tax Rental Agent

The regular monthly meeting of the county board which was postponed last week because of the absence of County Auditor H. A. Fowler, was held Wednesday. The meeting was taken up largely by routine business such as tax abatements.

The matter of handling the rentals of tax delinquent lands was discussed and it was decided to hire someone to handle this business. No one was decided on at the meeting although it is expected that someone will be named in a few days.

Of the numerous aplications for old age pensions only a few were denied and 23 applications were approved by the board. The county engineer from Red Lake county appeared before the board to ask Pennington county to cooperate in the improving of the road between River Falls twp. and River twp. one of which is in Red Lake county and the other in Penington, but no action was taken at this meeting.

HIGHER YIELDS ASSURED FROM SEED TREATING

C. C. Allison Tells Farmers Benefits of Treating Seeds Tuesday

Treating seed grain always pays and will pay especially well this year, farmers were told at the seed treating meeting held in the county last Tuesday, February 19. Mr C. G. Allison, representing the state agricultural extension service, was the speaker and the meeting was held at the court room in the court house, Thief River Falls.

Higher yields and better quality of grain crops practically always follows proper seed treatment, Mr Allison said. He went on to say that it is known that all of the oats and barley available from the Federal Seed Stock Committee is heavily smutted and that considerable reductions in yield and quality are to be expected unless all such seed is carefully treated Because of this serious crops disease menace to the drouth areas the federal government, through AAA, is cooperating with the state agricultural extension service in a Delegate to Nat'l. Unemployment Con. Reports Wed. Eve.

A meeting of the Unemployment Council of Thief River Falls was held at the Court House last evening to hear the report of Harvey Laney of Bemidji, who was sent as a delegate from this district to the Unemployment Insurance Congress at Washington, D. C. recently.

Mr. Laney stated that it was agreed by the three thousand delegates that the most adequate plan for social and unemployment insurance is embodied in the so-called Workers' Bill, sometimes referred to as the Lundeen Bill. The argument that the bill would be found to be unconstitutional was denied by declarations from representatives of five hundred lawyers who stated that the constitution is so drawn that legislation for the benelt of the people is mandatory Mr. Laney stated.

President Roosevelt's security plan was discussed and found to be wanting in many respects and those who oppose the Lundeen Bill are trying every way to force the president's bill thru and kill the Lundeen bill, Mr. Laney stated. All legislation passed so far by congress that was designed to help the common people has been defeated in practice and has actually burdened the people still further, Mr. Laney said. He cited the NRA and the NIRA as examples of failures to adequately help the people, stating that they have tended to make the rich richer and the poor poorer.

Following Mr. Laney's speech a resolution was passed demanding that the Minnesota House of Representatives seat W. E. Day of Bagley, who they declared is the legally elected representative from this district. The resolution is to be sent to the speaker of the House, Geo. W. Johnson, with request that it be read from the desk and printed in the journal.

COURT UPHOLDS CO. ATTORNEY IN PAY CUT CASE

H. O. Berve Cites the Pay of Attorneys in Neighboring Counties

Judge M. A. Brattland filed his decision in the Berve salary appeal last week. The decision fixes the county attorney's salary for four year term at $1,500, which is the same as has been paid in the past ten years. The case grew out of the county board's action in reducing the county attorney's salary to $1,200 at its January meeting. A cut which Mr. Berve appealed to the court.

In its decision the court states that the county attorney is a quasi-official of the court and cites the action of the legislature in leaving the salary for this office to be fixed by the court. He cites the fact that the work of the county attorney is on the increase due to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and that therefore the cut was unjustified.

Interviewed on the matter, Mr Berve stated that he is satisfied with the court's decision setting the salary at $1500. "That is all I expected or wanted," he said "If the board had left the salary alone there would have been no difficulty.

"In view of the fact that this matter has been given a good deal of publicity, I want to say that fifteen hundred dollars per year is about the same as that paid the county attorney in other counties of about the same size. As a basis of comparison, I might point out that Red Lake county pays its county attorney fifteen hundred dollars per year and furnishes him with an office, telephone, and lights, which would amount to over three hundred dollars a year additional. Roseau pays $1500; Norman pays $1500; Clearwater pays $1500 and telephone, etc.; Marshall, which is considerably larger and naturally has more work, pays $2100; Polk pays $2000 and Isanti county pays $1600 and furnishes an office. A lot of other small counties could be named but the foregoing should be sufficient to show that the $1500 paid here is in line with the amount paid by other counties for the same services."

ENGELSTAD IS HONORED BY R. R. V. DAIRYMEN

Pennington County Pioneer is Presented With Engraved Plaque

Peter Engelstad, of Rocksbury township, breeder of Guernsey cattle, was signally honored at the Red River Valley Winter Shows held at Crookston last week. He was presented with a suitably engraved plaque as a token of their esteem by the Red River Valley Dairymen's Association as a tribute for his efforts in behalf of the raising of the standard of dairy cattle in the valley.

Mr. Engelstad came to Pennington county in 1883. He has been connected with all lasting cooperative movements in the territory he has been connected with the cooperative creamery since it was organized in 1906, in Thief River Falls, and was manager for fifteen years. He is a member of the Red River Valley Guernsey Breeders association, has been a member of the Dairymen's association since it was organized in 1903, and was secretary for fifteen years. He is a member of the 17th district of Land O' Lakes. Mr. Engelstad purchased his first purebred Guernsey from Professor Haecker of University farm in 1904. He purchased his first Guernsey female in 1910. At present his herd numbers sixty head.

He was selected by the livestock and dairy cattle breeders of Pennington county and recommended to the Red River Valley Dairymen's association for recognition The custom of selecting one dairy cattle breeder and one general livestock breeder from each Red River Valley county will be made a permanent feature of the Winter Shows program, it was announced county historical society. As an in-

Reflecting the advance toward prosperity made by many counties of the Red River Valley during the past year, the 1935 Northwest School Farmers' Week and Red River Valley Winter Shows held in Crookston last week (February 4 to 8) were the most successful ever held from the standpoint of valley-wide cooperation, attendance and general interest combined.

Favored by mild weather and clear roads, nearly twelve thousand people attended the shows and meetings during the course of the week. The management and exhibitors alike were unusually well pleased with the outcome. Many of the exhibitors have spoken ahead for space at the 1936 shows, which will be held February 3 to 7 of next year, according to an announcement by the Winter Shows Board of Managers.

New and outstanding among the events of the week were the recognition of the 27 constructive dairy and general livestock breeders from thirteen Red River Valley counties who have contributed greatly to the development of the livestock industry of this region.

A second event of unusual importance was the presentation of a spectacular and highly educational pageant depicting the history and development of the Red River Valley. This pageant was made possible through the cooperation of commercial clubs, county commissioners, and other organizations in the various Red River Valley counties, who financed the county production. The success of the pageant was also due in large measure to the cooperation of about 250 people who constituted the county casts.

As a result of the interest aroused by the pageant, a committee representing historical societies of the Red River Valley was set up at the Winter Shows to organize a Valley-wide historical Society. Members of this committee are A. A. Dowell, superintendent of the Northwest School at Crookston; H. C. Nordlie of Moorhead, president of the Clay county historical society, and E. E. Billberg, president of the Roseau

COUNCIL IS IN DEADLOCK ON MAYOR CHOICE

Official Printing is Let to the Times At Fifteen Cents Per Folio

Thief River Falls will be a city without a mayor for at least two more weeks following a deadlock in the balloting by the council last night. Five ballots were cast with the following results: 1st ballot; Geo. Eastman, 1; Frank Rinkel, 2; Paul Lundgren, 1; Peter Myhrom, 1. Second ballot; Rinkel, 3; Lundgren, 1; Myhrom 1. Third ballot; Rinkel, 3; Lundgren, 2. Fourth ballot; the same. Fifth ballot; Rinkel, 3; Lundgren, 1; and Dr. O. F. Mellby, 1. Having agreed to disagree, the matter was laid over until the next meeting.

Opening of bids on the city official printing disclosed the bids of the Times and the Forum to be the same as was recently submitted to the county. The contract was awarded to the Times at 15 cents per folio for the first insertion; 10 cent per folio for subsequent insertions and no extra charge for tabular matter. The Union State Bank was the only bidder on depository of city funds and was awarded the contract

Al. Cloutier was granted a transfer of his beer license to his new place of business, and Art Johnson was granted "On" and "Off" sale beer licenses in the establishment he recently acquired on Main avenue. A refreshment license was granted Anton Dahl at the Dahl's Bakery.

Olaf Neset, B. O. Norby and Gilbert Fabrick appeared before the council and requested that it make application for an ERA project to build a Boy Scout hall, explaining that such a project has to be done thru a division of government and that therefore the Boy Scout committee cannot officially handle it. Some discussion as to the site for the proposed building disclosed that the committee had planned on building on the lots between the Robertson Lumber company and the Christian Science church on First street. However, it developed that the paving taxes on this parcel will amount to about eight hundred dollars, an amount the council is reluctant to abate. President Myhrom suggested that the committee look over the grounds near the new bridge which the state has acquired and stated that he believes permission can be secured from the highway department to construct the building on these premises. The council passed a resolution applying for an ERA project to construct the building. The Boy Scouts will raise funds for the materials for the structure with a subscription drive according to the committee. The building will be constructed of pine logs.

A resolution was passed making a "No Parking" zone along the east side of Red Lake Boulevard, from the new bridge and north past the Sons of Norway hall, following complaints from the residents along the street of obstruction of their driveways on nights that there are dances on at the hall.

It was decided to extend Markley avenue one block south and to lay water and sewer mains there. A resolution was passed requesting an ERA project be approved to cover the labor.

An application was submitted by the Thief River Falls Gospel Tabernacle congregation for a permit to construct a building to be used as a church on Horace avenue between the Soo Cafe building and the Model Creamery. The application was denied because a frame building is contemplated and the fire ordinances prohibit such construction within this zone.

Salaries of the firetruck drivers and the full-time fireman were set as follows, effective Feb. 15; first driver, $85 per month; second driver, $75 per month and the full-time fireman, $75 per month.

The bills of the month were approved for payment.

Move to Make Old Mill Site State Park is Launched

Senator Richard Rice of Marshall county is sponsoring a movement for the state to acquire the Old Mill Site, the wellknown picnic grounds west of Newfolden as a recreational ground and states that he hopes the people of northwestern Minnesota will get behind the movement and help him put it ove.r

He believes that it will be possible to get a CCC camp located there to put the grounds on condition and do some tree planting etc., if the project can be put thru. The ground, which is the largest and most popular in this section of the state is ideally suited to the purpose, and is ample to accomodate a crowd of upward of 20,000 people with enough room for parking. It is a natural amphitheatre and slopes to the river in a wide semi-circle. It is much used for picnics and openair meetings.

ATTENDANCE AT RED RIVER VALLEY WINTER SHOWS MAKES GAIN

itial step, this committee will work with local groups in the interest of organizing county historical societies.

Among the talks of the week which valley people will long remember were those of Dr. George Mecklenburg of Minneapolis on his impressions of the people of Oriental countries during a recent journey around the world; a talk on crime prevention and correction by Edwin L. Lindell of St. Paul, secretary of the Minnesota Law and Order League, and Dr. A. A. Dowell's report of the recent investigation of direct livestock marketing which he assisted the Bureau of Agricultural Economics in conducting last year. This report attracted nation-wide attention.

In the annual livestock and crops judging contests for students of sub-collegiate schools of agriculture held in connection with the Northwest School Farmers' Week and Red River Valley Winter Shows, teams representing the Northwest School at Crookston won championship. This double victory is only the second won by any one school in one year since these contests were organized ten years ago.

In the farmers' general livestock judging contest the Beltrami Boosters' Club of Polk county won first over the Flom Farm Bureau unit of Norman county, but the latter organization reversed this order in the farmers' dairy cattle judging contest. In the 4-H general livestock and dairy cattle judging contests, teams from Hubbard county won the championships. In the crops judging contest for 4-H club members Ruby Brendt of Glyndon won first. In the 4-H club dairy demonstration contest the Norman county team composed of Roy Boman of Syre and James Christenson of Twin Valley, won first honors and Kenneth Bolstad of Fertile ranked first on an individual basis.

In the annual Red River Valley rural school spelling contest Lydia Enslin of Luce, Otter Tail county won first; Glenn Dahlman of Lancaster, Kittson county, second; Olive LaCoursiere of Red Lake Falls, Red Lake county, third Gladys Arneson of Shevlin, Clear water county, fourth; and June Nelson, Gary, Norman county fifth.

NAZI PAPER EXPOSES GERMAN LABOR LABORY

Koenigsberg, (TIS)— Introductions of the six-hour working day without loss of wages was one of the many promises of Hitlerism to German labor. As late as November, 1934, the National Socialist Cell Units demanded a seven (7) hour maximum working day and insisted that the new rule should especially be applied to young workers in labor camps Recently, the Nazi paper, the "Ostdeutsche Sturmtrupp',, published the results of an inquiry into the working hours of young labor camp workers between 14 and 18 years of age. Investigating the working conditions of 427 workers in one district, they found only 10 who worked less than 40 hours a week. 149 worked 12 hours a day, 65 worked 13 hours a day, 60 worked 14 hours, 40 worked 15 hours, 8 worked 16 hours, and 2 worked over 16 hours a day, The government's answer to this unwitting exposure of the exploitation of German youth, was the immediate suppression of the paper.

Spanish Labor Forces Intact, Says Leader

Madrid (TIS)—Spanish organized labor has remained intact despite the victory of the Fascist reactionary forces last year, declared the Spanish Socialist and labor leader Largo Caballero in a secret communication from the Model prison at Madrid, where he is at present imprisoned. Speaking of the Spanish Socialist Party, Caballero added in a statement to the T.I.S correspondent: "It has not been affected to any appreciable extent. From the news reaching us from every quarter, it appears that the trade unions are re-building. The men who have fallen, or who are in prison, have already been replaced by other men. The Spanish reaction has been unable to imprison the faith or the hope of Spanish labor. Despite all attempts of our permanent enemies to disorganize and destroy the labor unions and the party, labor's organizations are as strong and more militant than ever."

About 30,000 trade unionists and Socialists are at present in prison .Wholesale arrests continue even in the provinces where the uprising had no echo, as for instance in Andalusia. Informations from Asturias, where the battles waged most bitterly, are extremely scarce. The number of workers killed during the uprising is still unknown. An appeal has been sent out to labor organizations thruout the world to relieve the plight of the labor victims of the Spanish reaction.

IRON ORE REVENUES SWELL STATE COFFERS

For the quarter ending December 31, the State Division of Lands and Minerals paid into the state treasury the sum of $83,259.49, according to F. A. Wildes, Division Director. This revenue accrued from royalties and rentals of state iron ore leases.

"Shipping of iron ore generally ceased by the end of September, although during the month of October a considerable tonnage amounting to about 130,000 tons went forward," Mr. Wildes said.

WILL DISCUSS PLANS FOR WILD LIFE RESEARCH WORK

Plans for the establishment of a proposed wild life research bureau in Minnesota will receive the attention of the Minnesota Conservation Commission at its February meeting. Three agencies are interested in the program that has been outlined with the United States Bureau of Biological Survey co-operating in the venture with the University of Minnesota and the Minnesota Department of Conservation in the event that the plan can be worked out and finally approved.

An invitation has been extended to Jay N. Darling, chief of the bureau, to attend the commission's meeting and it is posible that he will be in attendance.

Tentative plans for the wild life research bureau have been approved by Dr. Lotus D. Cofman University president, with members of the conservation commission working on further details. It is proposed that the Carlos Avery Game Refuge in Anoka and Chisago counties be utilized as an outdoors laboratory in connection with the research work relative to game diseases and management control.

LAND ACQQUISITION PLAN TAKES CONZET TO CAPITOL

Federal and state programs for land acquisition were discussed in Washington last week with Grover Conzet, Director of the Division of Forestry and Fire Prevention, conferring with federal forestry officials. While in Washington Mr. Conzet delivered a paper before the annual meting of the Society of American Foresters relative to Minnesota's program of land acquisition.

Members of the Minnesota Conservation Commission are keenly interested in both the state and federal programs designed to increase potential forest areas. Federal land purchases are being made to enlarge Minnesota's two national forests, the Superior and the Chippewa, and the state program calls for purchases of land within present state forests.

STATE REVENUE FROM WOOD PERMIT GRANTS

A total of 118 wood permit grants were issued by the state Division of Forestry during the Month of January which produced a revenue to the state of $1,722,.98 as compared to 136 similar permits in December producing $2,682.46, according to a report made by Grover Conzet, state forester.

Total cash receipts involving sale of timber removed from state forests amounted to $1,908.63 in January while December showed a total of $3,779.92 from this source, the report said.

State appraisers prosecuted 18 trespass cases during January with $185.65 collected for the purloined timber. In December, 22 trespass cases resulted in timber payments of $767.59.

Sale of dead and down timber in January included 69,000 feet of timber, 4,004 cords, 2,357 ties and 1,600 posts. During December 6,089 cords of dead and down timber were sold together with 320 feet of timber, 632 ties, 85 cedar poles and 1,020 cedar posts, all removed from state-owned land.

"Sales of dead and down timber is the means of salvaging considerable state-owned timber which otherwise would be wasted and also results in a healthier and safer condition for the forests," Mr. Conzet said. "Most of this work must be carried on during the winter months because most of the wood is located in swamps which cannot be logged in the summer."

GAME WARDENS ACTIVE IN WINTER BIRD FEEDING

Over 100 tons of feed with 189 feeding stations not included have been distributed to game birds so far this winter by the state game wardens, according to a report issued by Charles McFarlane, deputy director of the Game and Fish division. The average feed per feeding station is 69 pounds with an average of 80 birds.

A total of 2,296 feeding stations are being maintained by wardens with 15 counties not yet reporting.

"We are deeply grateful to sportsmen's organizations and other groups that have carried on intensive bird feeding campaigns," Mr McFarlane said. 'Twin City sportsmen have contributed liberally with cash, 100 percent of which has gone to feeding of the birds. Boy Scouts and 4-H club members have co-operated with wardens and sportsmen's clubs to see to it that feed is distributed regularly.

"Winter this year looms as a serious barrier to the progress being made in the state-wide program of wild life restoration. Drought has been severe and natural food is unusually scarce. Farmers are unable to assist nature in caring for game birds because of crop shortages. Intense cold weather and deep snows have added to the problem.

"The wholehearted support accorded the Game and Fish Division on every hand assures healthy, abundant brood stock for the spring nesting seasons."

Charge Creamery Board Resort to False Figures in Defense of "Horse-Trade"

To the Editor:

When a person is drowning he will grab at a straw and so they thought the Pelican Rapids creamery might keep them afloat by juggling figures.

The Pelican Rapids creamery—average price paid for butterfat in 1933 was .22.47c; at the end of the year they found they had overpaid .00.34c per lb., leaving net price 22.13c.

The Thief River Falls creamery—average price paid for butterfat in 1933 was .19.28c. Pelican Rapids paid .02.85c over T. R. Falls creamery.

The Fergus Falls creamery—average net price paid for butterfat was in 1933 .24.05c—T. R. Falls .19.28c, difference .04.77c per lb.

The Sebeka creamery—average net price paid for butterfat in 1933 was .23.49c—T. R. Falls .19.28c difference .04.21c per lb.

We thank you for questioing our figures. It was just what we aimed at.

The farmers around Sebeka Fergus Falls and Pelican Rapids have taught us a lesson. They realize that it is their creamery efficiently managed that brings the best return for butterfat.

A cream station can't get a toehold in either of these towns; their creameries pay a price that the cream station can't meet. The manager of one of these independent creameries told us how he came very near losing his job The creamery board at one time had a notion to join the Land O'Lakes. He stood pat and told them "if you join the Land O'Lakes, I am through." He won out.

In Thief River Falls we have a fine commodious creamery building, built and paid for by a few of the willfull under the most adverse conditions! the town full of cream stations and a couple smaller creameries catering to the local trade.

Plenty of competition for butterfat in T. R. Falls; competition they say, brings a good price. It is not so. If it was not for that big co-operative creamery down by the Soo track we would have to take whatever they choose to give us. We now want to give you an example. The writer of this drove through Sebeka August 11th, 1934 having heard about this creamery I was sufficiently interested to stop and ask a few questions. The cash price that date was .31c. The cash price in T. R. Falls was .26c January 10th, 1935, a group of four was in that same town again. The cash price in that town that date was .39c while the cash price in T. R. Falls was .33c. The Sebeka creamery pays cash for every can of cream that comes in. Cash to all, no monthly. This ought to be enough to open anybody's eyes Why not a 2,000,000 lb. creamery in T. R. Falls.?

We farmers make a mistake in building and supporting too many small creameries. If we centered about a biger one we would all be better off.

This part of the state is especially well-fitted for dairying and mixe d farming . Clover and alfalfa grow better here than in most other parts of the state. Our creamery won't be any too big by and by. A little common sense used now should alter the whole situation.

Our creamery board consists of five members, three of whom constitute a majority and can do things against the will of the other two.

What a fine world this would be if the majority were always right Politically and in other matters The majority is too often wrong and that is why we are in the mess we are.

We hereby want to place the responsibility with the majority and absolve Mr. Beiswenger and Mr. Kaushagen, for they at least showed their wilingness to turn down the notorious trade deal.

yours very truly,
Tobias Stene,
Gordon M. Olson
Christian Steen,
L. O. Stenseth.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND FASCISM

The Kept Press and the administration spokesmen are much concerned about Fascism and Communism if the daily wails we hear from them are any indication of their worries. In this viewing with alarm, of course Communism gets the lion's share of the publicity. This in spite of the fact that the Communist party numbers only something like 20,000 members and are not now, and never was a threat to American institutions. Americans are not inclined towards Communism, and never will be if democratic institutions which they have learned to revere are given half a chance to survive. But if the intolerable conditions which have prevailed for the past four or five years are to continue, they will be driven to Communism in spite of anything that the Kept Press, Roosevelt, or anyone else can do to prevent it.

Fascism is a real threat at this time and the Kept Press and the administration are fastening it upon the American people even while they profess a horror of it. No, they do not call it Fascism. They will always find some nice patriotic name for anything they wish to put over. Facism is an intense, alien-hating nationalism whereunder all power is reposed in a central government operated by or in behalf of organized private capital, and with a large standing army and navy ready to enforce its degrees. Facism promises the taxpayers relief; the producers security and the youth opportunity. After it has gained power these promises are conveniently forgotten and all its efforts are directed towards securing the Financial crowd complete and undisputed power and the people in thralldom.

And the American brand of Facism is running true to the form displayed in Germany and Italy. Roosevelt promised labor a square deal and ushered in the NRA with all the ballyhoo that characterized Hitler's bid for power when his picture was plastered all over every available space in the Fatherland with the word "ya" in five foot letters. But the safeguards for labor contained in the NRA has been conveniently pigeon-holed. The farmers were promised cost of production and the AAA was given them with scarce less gusto than that which accompanied the NRA; but besides being regimented, the farmers have very little to show for the program.

The next step in the program is to secure a large enough war machine to safeguard the Facist control and if you think Roosevelt is opposed to war and Facism a glance at the budget which he has submitted for the military activities of the government may disillusion you.

He asks for $792,484,265 for the army and navy, which is the largest sum ever asked for the purpose by any president in times of peace. This is $180,000,000 more than was spent last year. It represents an increase in military appropriations of about 65 per cent. And as the Christian Century has pointed out, with the slice of PWA funds which the military agencies will surely get again this year, just as they did last year, the expenditures for war purposes this year may well exceed the billion dollar mark. Couple the foregoing with the fact that Roosevelt frowned very decidedly on the munitions investigation, and the "gag" rule which has been clamped on Congress by the democrats, and then try to honestly answer the question: "Who is 'der Fuehrer' in the United States?"

THE PROGRESSIVES TURN THUMBS DOWN

Many liberals have voiced disappointment because the progressives in the United States senate voted almost unanimously against the entrance of the United States in the World Court. It would seem to us that their vote is entirely justified.

A world tribunal where the disputes of nations can be settled amiably and a consequent universal disarmament has been the dream of liberals and radicals for probably a century or more. However, unless the participants in such a court are honest nations with honest, conscientious and democratic governments such a court can only be a farce and a travesty on justice. No one wants to be tried before a prejudiced judge and a packed jury and a world court wherein sits representatives of Hitler, Mussolini, Facist Austria, and militaristically inclined and bourgeois France can be nothing less.

Each of these nations are joining in the court with their fingers crossed. Each of them is pulling wires; scheming and plotting under cover to outmaneuver the other; each of them is bristling with armament even as the United States is, and appropriating huge sums for more armaments. A court composed of thieves and brigands will hang an honest man and a court of nations composed of the representatives of nations seeking world empire, advantages in foreign markets and industrial supremacy can be nothing short of a brigand court and in our opinion the progressive senators who voted against joining in any such a set-up used good judgment. The fact that there are some honest and peaceable nations who have joined in the court does not make it an honest tribunal, for they are the smaller nations and carry little weight in the international chess game.

SPEAKING OF USELESS STATISTICS

George Jacobus, president of the Professional Golfers' Association of America, has figured out that the golf balls used annually in the United States would build a pyramid 325 feet high, or only a little less than the great pyramid of Egypt. Which is about as useless information as knowing how far beyond the limits of the "Flights of Fancy" all the words written about the Hauptmann case would reach if they were placed end to end.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

W. C. T. U. TO HONOR FOUNDER

—O—

To Observe February 17 Also As Start of Temperance Sessions

—O—

Annually observed by the W. C. T. U. with public meetings, February 17, the anniversary of the death of Frances E. Willard, the founder of the W. C. T. U. also will be observed this year as the date of the first 1935 temperance lesson for Sunday Schools. Miss Willard died 37 years ago, and memorial meetings are the only memorials of the W. C. T. U. in her memory. At the anniversary meeting each of the 10,000 unions of the United States are supposed to donate at least $2 in Frances Willard's memory to carry forward the work which she gave her life to promote.

The money is sent by each state treasurer of the W. C. T. U. to the National treasurer and is allotted to the several states for organizing, literature, work among Negroes and for the work among children and young people.

This year February 17 falls on Sunday and is the first temperance lesson in the Sunday schools for 1935. Mrs. Annie M. Ewing of Princeton, state director of religious education, has sent material for alcohol education in the Sunday Schools to each of the 200 local unions in the state to help in planning for the day. "A Good Citizen," "The Liquor Situation," are the themes for the study, with Peter 2:11-17; 4:1-5 as the lesson text. Many of the Unions will, with the co-operation of pastors, hold public evening meetings also.

The Fifth District W. C. T. U. at its meeting this week sent resolutions of appreciation to Senator Norris Sheppard for his speech on January 16 before the United States Senate and recommended that the state legislative department of the W. C. T. U. work for the "Dram Shop Act" similar to the one in Illinois, making the seller of liquor responsible for damages resulting from the sale of liquor.

The W. C. T. U. will work for the passage of the bill introduced by Senator Capper on January 10 in the United States Senate (S.541) banning liquor advertisements sent to any state where such advertising is unlawful.

"Alas for poor Huey,—
His line becomes hooey—Author Unknown.

There he stood, big as life, with all the earmarks of the gentleman from Louisiana,—Huey Long, on a tour of conquest in Georgia. Addressing the state legislature there the honorable Huey told of his aims: "We don't want to destroy capitalism—we want to perfect it; we don't care for the man with a million dollars or less—we are out to get the man with five million or a hundred million dollars. We want to render democratic justice to all and still preserve the system."

Now this doesn't sound like the thundering champion of the people that we used to know. Has Huey gone haywire? It almost seems that way. Or is this a display of clever tactics on his part—trying to fool the enemy while he sneaks up on them behind their backs? But this seems improbable.

The bare statement, as Huey expresses it, becomes ridiculous, even when exuded for the benefit of a newsreel audience. By what logic does the exploitative power of a million dollars become less potent than that of five million, or a hundred million? The exploitative power of even one dollar is negligible, but it is still there. The principle remains the same under all circumstances.

I think that Huey Long needs new ammunition: the old has been shot and re-shot so many times that it sounds hollow,—to change the figure of speech, it has become hooey of the first goo.

Honesty is the Best Policy

A relief worker in New York recently picked up a wallet containing $45,000 in bills and returned it to the brokerage firm which had lost it. His reward was $75 in cash and $20 a week for a period long enough to tide him over the spell during which the public would remember his wonderful act. When asked what he would do with his suddenly acquired wealth, the man replied that he would get a suit of clothes, rent a room, and other things that he would think of later,—perhaps eat a good meal or two. The point was that he did not possess a suit of clothes or a good place to sleep.

The formalities over, the inevitbale moral appeared,—"Honesty is the best policy." Of course, newsreel patrons who wondered how a brokerage firm could afford to leave $45,000 laying around careless-like, in an honest manner were not answered, and won't be.

"The Truth and Nothing But the Truth"

Speaking of honesty, one is reminded of Truth, a close relation. If one states what he honestly believes, it is really truth. But there is no absolute truth; what may be true for me is false for you; what is true today was not true yesterday, and may not be tomorrow. The thing is, like the poet Lowell said, "We must upward still and onward, to keep abreast of truth."

Thus, in the field of social reform, what are minimum demands for one group are maximum demands for another. Five years ago the communists were derided and blasphemed for suggesting a social insurance plan,—that was a "dole." Today we find numerous "pension" plans, which differ only in the matter of raising the money—and what a difference! The Lundeen bill is, of course, the only plan of any real worth to the working class; and this contains the essence of communist demands for several years back.

The truth is, the further ahead the shock-troopers of truth do go, the further the middle coursers can advance. Pioneers also have their place, much as they are rated foolhardy by the stay-at-homes who say it can't be done.

Minute Sermons

By Dr. Crawford Grays

The administration challenges capitalism that on the basis of "rugged individualism" and "selfish exploitation" it can no longer sit in the seat of power, it must give way to government who will legalize a "share-the wealth" program and make possible old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, aid for dependent children, maternal and child health welfare and public health benefits.

All of this goes under the administration's claim that we MUST HAVE a "Social Security Program" and to this end, we will see enacted during the next two years, plenty of social legislation; the kind that twenty-five years ago was Socialism.

Ideals ultimately have their day though they come through Golgotha.

The needs of our modern economic life can no longer be met by "rugged individualism" and selfish exploitation," but by "rugged socialization" and "sharing."

For the good of each and all; each and all should be glad to make the necessary adjustments which, after all, would only be Christian.

Washington Kaleidoscope

From letter by Cong. Paul J. Kvale

In defeating the World Court protocol, which would have provided that the United States adhere to the World Court of International Justice, the Roosevelt administration undeniably suffered a major rebuff at the Senate's hands. The House of Representatives, of course, had no voice in this matter, because treaties with foreign nations become effective when confirmed by a two-thirds vote of the Senate. And the advocates of the proposal failed to get the necessary two-thirds.

The rejection of the protocol was a decided victory for those who entertain the opinion that the United States should avoid, as far as possible, foreign entanglements. Both Minnesota's Senators, Shipstead and Schall, opposed the proposal. It is of interest to note that Senators Hiram Johnson and Norris, both of whom were active New Dealers in the past campaign and who had the open favor of the administration, voted against it while Senator Cutting, whom the administration tried to unseat, supported the proposal. That is living up to their reputation for independence.

—O—

The functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the super-loaning agency of the government, have been extended for two years under the provisions of a bill which passed both houses of Congress in a most limited length of time. Ordinarily a bill of such importance would have been given far more consideration by the Congress, but because the functions of the RFC would automatically have terminated on January 31st, it was necessary to act promptly in order to continue the huge corporation's very life, and clothe its activities with legality. Consequently, the administration's forces united in hastening enactment and in voting down amendments, regardless of their purpose or intent.

It may be remembered that the original act was amended last year to permit loans to be made to private industry, but with the restriction that such loans could only be made to corporations that were actually in existence at the time. The purpose of the restriction of course was to prevent loans for the purpose of creating new business to compete with these already trying to exist. Now, however, this restriction is removed, and many industries are much concerned over what may result. Minnesota may well look at one of her already struggling industries, the paper and pulp mills, which by this action is threatened with new competition from the South.

FARM and MARKET

BY
R. A. Trovatten, Minnesota Commissioner of Agriculture Dairy and Food

Following an olive branch gesture between pro-administration legislators and anti's, a one-million dollar drouth relief bill passed the House in the Minnesota Legislature at the close of last week's session. Originally there was much heated discussion over the procedure of the question of relief. The Governor's eleven million dollar relief bill, which incorporated an appropriation of one million for druoth relief, was presented to the Legislature previous to the bill that just passed the House. When the bill which called for drouth relief exclusively was introduced, it was feared that the Governor's bill was destined to be side-tracked until the end of the session.

—O—

However, both factions made peace and agreed to pass the drouth million at once and then act on the balance $10,000,000 at the end of this week. This was a good move for the farmers, as the matter of drouth is a serious one—too serious to become involved in a political wrangle.

Both branches of the Legislature went on record in favor of a liberal old-age pension plan. While the Townsend plan was not specifically mentioned, the name was referred to while debates were in progress in the House. Of course the only thing the Minesota Legislature could do about a national old age pension is to memorialize Congress, requesting the passage of such a law. They did just that—a unanimous vote in the Senate and three dissenting votes in the House. One of the House members who voted against the resolution feared that, by virtue of its contents, it indicated the Townsend plan.

—O—

The two-billion dollar seed relief bill, designed to furnish seed to farmers in the drouth-stricken areas, is still being held up in the House committee of emergency relief. Members of the committee attribute the delay to forthcoming information from the Federal government which will state the amount of money to be appropriated from that source. The bill originally called for a pound to pound and bushel to bushel repayment. That is, a farmer, upon receiving a pound of seed, will pay it back by the same measure in grain produced. It is said, however, that the committee is in favor of raising the ration to one pound of seed, or bushel, to a pound and a half in payment, or a bushel and a half, whatever the case may be. The committee asserted that farmers might take advantage of the first offer by feeding the seed instead of planting it.

DEMOCRACY AND THE "GAG" RULE

By A. F. Whitney,
President R. R. Trainmen

One of the foundation principles of democracy, a principle which the framers of the American form of government most zealously tried to preserve, is the principle of thorough deliberation on all legislative proposals. The history of mankind proves that man strongly tends to oppose that which he is ignorant of. Therefore, if a nation is to progress it must carefully preserve to the fullest opportunity for deliberation and general enlightenment on all of the problems that confront a people.

The "gag" rule which has been imposed by the national House of Representatives strikes at the very foundation stones of democracy and makes a mockery of our form of government, yet our great constitutional lawyers remain silent. Normally, if a majority of the legislators in a democracy favor a legislative proposition, that proposition becomes a law. But under the "gag" rule, now imposed by the House of Representatives, it requires that a majority of the members of the House shall sign a formal petition even to permit deliberation on legislative proposals which the administration leaders do not favor. Because of the very natural human characteristic of opposing things of which we are ignorant, it means that the President and a few leaders in the House are virtual dictators, because Members of Congress will not sign petitions to bring upon the floor for deliberation and enlightening discusison those legislative proposals of which they are ignorant. Therefore, the consequence of the "gag" rule is that much desirable social legislation, which might be enacted if our legislators were enlightened upon it, will die in the hands of a committee of an insignificant number of the people's representatives.

More and more American people ar beginning to ask themselves the question, "Are the principles of democracy and the Constitution something to be applied only when a few powerful leaders in the country are favorable to their application?"

Bible Parable "Husks" a Legume

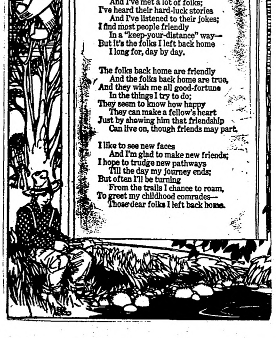
The "husks" eaten by the prodigal son in the Bible parable are identified in a Mediterranean legume with a sweet edible pulp, which is called "St. John's bread."

Source of All Raw Wealth

By Gilbert A. Brattland

It is readily proven that the only sources of raw wealth are the sunshine, the air, the water and the earth. The Central West has been depleted of all its other reserves in cash, credit and titles to property. The Central West cannot retrieve any of them if they must continue to produce raw wealth at a loss. They would be very much in the same position as the frog in the fable. He fell in a well. In trying to get out, he jumped up three feet and fell back four. Query: "How long would it take him to reach the top of the well?" The poor frog would be just where the Central West farmer is today—he would stay at the bottom because he could not fall deeper than that. If he were blindly optimistic, he could continue the process of jumping the rest of his days without reasoning out the results of the process. If a miner could sell his raw gold at a profit and could sell enough, he would become wealthy and would not suffer want. However, if that miner had to produce gold at a loss, he would find himself in the condition of the farmers today.

Until and when the farmer gets a profit on his raw products over and above the cost of production, there can be no return to prosperity in the Central West or anywhere else. They have listened to the "Siren Song" of producing two blades of grass where only one grew before without reasoning out that under the present sales exchange, the more they produce the more they have slipped. A fair profit price for the raw producer, a fair wage to the worker and a fair exchange for such services in manufactured or processed goods, will again send the throb of industry pulsating through the flabby veins of our failing industrial system. If our system cannot answer this problem, then what?



I've seen a lot of country
And I've met a lot of folks;
I've heard their hard-luck stories
And I've listened to their jokes;
I find most people friendly
In a "keep-your-distance" way—
But it's the folks I left back home
I long for, day by day.

The folks back home are friendly
And the folks back home are true,
And they wish me all good-fortune
In the things I try to do;
They seem to know how happy
They can make a fellow's heart
Just by showing him that friendship
Can live on, though friends may part.

I like to see new faces
And I'm glad to make new friends;
I hope to trudge new pathways
Till the day my journey ends;
But often I'll be turning
From the trails I chance to roam,
To greet my childhood comrades—
Those dear folks I left back home.

THE DAY-WALDAL CONTEST

Just what to expect from the conservative majority leadership in the Minnesota House of Representatives is being clearly brought out in the election contest between W. E. Day, liberal, of Bagley, and Marius Waldal, conservative, of Plummer.

The Clearwater county canvassing board made a mistake, not in counting, but in reporting its total to the State canvasing board. The error, had it not been an error, would have given the election to Waldal. However, the mistake was discovered, and corrected by telegraph within two hours. Waldal hails from the 65th legislative district and normally would be among the last whose election certificate would be acted upon by the Republican Secretary of State. Yet when the telegram arrived the Clearwater county board was informed that a certificate of election already had been issued to the conservative. On the strength of that he was seated and voted with the majority.

In the resulting contest before Judge Graham M. Torrance, it was established that at least two ballots were not cast at the legal voting place. Instead they were taken miles from the booth to bedridden voters who obligingly marked them for Waldal. But excluding those two the contest showed Day, liberal, elected by a majority of 11 votes over Waldal, conservative. Judge Torrance's decision was, and is, to defeat the will of the people.

But reactionary forces rallied to Waldal. In face of the canvassing board's corrected report, despite admitted fraud in casting ballots, and in defiance of the finding of the courts, Waldal was allowed to retain his seat. Day, the liberal, properly elected, was denied his legal place in the legislative body.

Perhaps the Day-Waldal case is no more irregular than others "put over" by reactionary forces during the November elections. But it is so glaring and unmistakeable that it lends itself sharply to illustrating how desperate the reactionary group was, and is, o defeat the will of the people of Minnesota.

RED MENACE A JOKE
(Mille Lacs County Times)

The Fortune Magazine, a conservative publication, has been making an investigation of the "red menace" in the United States. It announces that it found that the red menace was just another bogey man used by politicians who hope to get into office by scaring the voters. It points out that "reds" in this country are way in the minority and of negligible influence.

"Communism in America," says this magazine, "consists of a party with but 26,000 enrolled members. The whole nation-wide lot of communists scarcely outnumber their enemy, the New York police force, and from sixty to seventy percent of them are out of work. The reds may be troublemakers and 'fomenters of revolution' but they can make trouble and foment riots only when the capitalistic system has done gross injustice to some social group."

Fortune Magazine is a millionaires' periodical and nobody can claim that it is under control of Moscow. People who take stock in the "red scares" that are hatched in every political campaign do no credit to their judgment or good sense.

WHY A SALES TAX?
(Minnesota Leader)

Disguise it as they may, advocates of a sales tax are trying to clamp on the people of Minnesota a measure to relieve Big Business of its taxes and force their payment by men and women of small means.

A sales tax became effective in Illinois July 1, 1933. The law provided that proceeds for the first six months be devoted to unemployment relief. But it was used to pay expenses which formerly had been met by taxes against the owners of real and personal property, most of them wealthy men and women.

The Illinois sales tax now amounts to $36,000,000 annually. So no taxes are levied against real and personal property. Most of the $36,000,000 is collected from farmers and wage earners and special privilege is delighted. What a wonderful thing that would be for the vested interests of Minnesota.

LITTLE SWEDEN POINTS THE WAY
(Labor)

"Sweden celebrated the end of her depression as Parliament opened its sessions today," says an Associated Press dispatch.

How the little Scandinavian country has solved problems that still baffle larger and richer nations is of more than ordinary interest.

Preparedness is the answer. Sweden has devoted more time and attention to problems of public welfare than almost any other country. As far back as 1914 its Socialist government appointed a committee to investigate unemployment and map out a program to deal with it. The United States in 1921 appointed a similar committee, but its recommendations were promptly forgotten.

Instead of doles the Swedish committee called upon the government to create jobs through public works, and when the depression came it was ready with its projects. Able-bodied men were placed upon payrolls and became producers as well as consumers.

The labor unions, with reserve funds for the aid of their members, to which the government contributes, have been an important factor. It was to them that the government largely looked for the successful carrying out of its plans.

In 1933, one-seventh of the country's population was on some form of relief. Today there are less than 80,000 unemployed men and women—about 1 per cent of the population.

Last year less than half of the relief appropriation was spent, and this year the government asks less than $15,000,000 for all kinds of assistance.

Even more extraordinary is the Associated Press report that the government, while caring for its jobless, balanced its budget without levying new taxes or floating loans. The national debt this year will be reduced $10,000,000.

ADVERTISING
(Country Press)

Advertising, like all other things, is subject to discussion. It often fails, but more often succeeds. When a merchant or a manufacturer spends money for publicity he wants results. If the business world did not get results the habit of advertising would pass out over-night.

To the public advertising is a great convenience. It educates. It informs. It acquaints. If wisely used advertising is worth its costs. Like other expenditures, however, it must not be foolish and it must not be expected to be miraculous.

Tax Delnquency Issue In Continued CCC Work

Action on the part of the state legislature now in session in St Paul with reference to any further extension of time on tax-delinquent lands within state conservation areas will be important to continued work by the Civilian Conservation Corps in Minnesota, E. V. Willard, commissioner of conservation, stated in a communication to Governor Olson last week.

ECW forest and park improvements may be made only on publicly owned lands.

"With some 15,000 young men engaged in Emergency Conservation work in 61 camps scattered throughout many northern sections of Minnesota, an effort must be made to consolidate as much as possible state-controlled lands located within state forests and conservation areas," Commissioner Willard said: "Not only can forest production be hastened but forest fire protection can be augmented through the efforts of the Triple C."

It is expected that the Minnesota Conservation Commission will act on this subject during the February meeting.

HUGE STOCK OF CANNED BEEF ACCUMULATES IN ST. CLOUD

A reserve of 1,000,000 tins of beef for the state's needy has been produced in 75,000 man-hours of relief work in the St. Cloud plant operated by the Minnesota SERA (State Emergency Relief Administration), it is announced by Walter F. McGregor, state engineer for the organization.

Up to February 4th, the workers had received $45,000 in wages and $29,000 had been expended for cans, shipping boxes and sundry materials, acocrding to L. H. Jacobson, industrial engineer of the work division. Operations probably will continue for another month or two.

HOLS RESUMOS ACTIVITY ON RELIEF APPLICATIONS

Otto Bremer, State manager, today announces definite instructions from the general manager of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation at Washington adthorizing resumption of loan activity on the 6022 aplications which have been held in suspense since Novembe 15, 1934.

Mr. Bremer said that on January 29th President Roosevelt instructed the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to place before the Banking and Currency Committee of Congress its recommendation for extending the Corporation's borrowing power for home loan relief.

Anticipating early Congressional action increasing its resources, the Board authorized immediate resumptio n of normal procedure by its state and district offices in handling all loan applications which had been suspended by its order of November 15, 1934. This move expedites the final decision as to the eligibility of 6022 applications which have been held in suspense for the past ten weeks.

The actual authorization of additional funds for Corporation loans must await Congressional action. The present resumption of operations by the Corporation means that those applications which have not yet passed beyond the earlier stages of appraisal and investigation and were held in suspense since November will now be forwarded through subsequent routine steps into the legal department and may be closed more promptly when money is available.

Mr. Bremer said that the resuming of activity on the suspended cases will include the securing of new "consents to accept bonds from mortgagees and other lien holders and a recheck on all appraisals previously made where such recheck is necessary."

The lending procedure will not be altered or modified in any respect to past regulations, and only those applications received before November 15, 1934 will be considered at this time. No new aplications will be received.

PLANTERS PRESS FOR SUPPRESSION OF AWAKENING SHARE-CROPPERS

Memphis.—Moving to the protection of their feudal rights under the ancient plantation system of the South, the planters who succeeded in plastering a conviction for "anarchy" on Ward Rodgers, Socialist secretary for the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union are now after the jobs of Robert O'Brien, instructor at LeMoyne college, and Wiliam R. Amberson of the University of Tennessee O'Brien and Amberson have been instrumental in telling the outside world just what is involved in the "share-cropping" system.

The S. T. F. U. is meeting this weekend to plan measures for resisting evictions and for continuing the defense of Rodgers and share-cropper defendants in Arkansas courts. Roy Burt is attending the convention as representative of the Socialist national organization.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has joined the fight for Rodgers contributing $25 to the fund being raised through Norman Thomas Several farm organizations are expected to join in the defense.

Declamation Contest Held In Plummer Tuesday Eve.

The Plummer high school held its declamation contest in the high school assembly on Tuesday evening. Juanita Ripple won the dramatic division, Arnie Karlstad won in the oratorical division and Margaret Suam won in the humorous division. There were seven contestants for the three places and the decisions were all very close.

The next fellowship meeting will be held at the Pentecostal Gospel Tabernacle at Detroit Lakes on March fifth.

Bill for Blind Pension Is Introduced in House

There is now before the Minnesota legislature a bill proposing that all state and county relief paid to adult blind persons of the state be placed on a pension basis. This bill which is sponsored by the Minnesota State Organization of The Blind, and introduced in the House by Representative Henry Horwitz of St. Paul, is in line with similar laws enacted in 1 or 17 other states.

The essential features of the bill are: Thirty dollars per month to be paid to any adult blind person whose income is less than forty dollars a month; the county and state each to bear one-half the cost; the pension to be administered locally by the county boards with certain jurisdiction and supervision of the Minnesota State Board of Control.

Such a pension, it is asserted by its sponsors, is based on the contention that blindness is a sufficiently well defined cause of dependence as to require special legislation by the state. It is also apparent, say pension advocates that the machine has practically eliminated the blind in industry and economic conditions have so greatly reduced any posibility of blind people securing employment that self-support is out of the question for the majority of them On Friday, Feb. 15th, at 9:00 p. m the Minnesota State Organization of the Blind, will conduct a broadcast, during which Perry R. Moore Minneapolis attorney, will discuss the proposed legislation over WTGN.

Community Benefit to be Staged in Plummer Fri.

The St. Hilaire School Band has been secured to provide music between acts of the play to be presented, and Martin's orchestra is to furnish the music for the dance which will follow the program.

The funds raised is to be used to purchase chairs for the new village hall. The committee in charge assures a good time.

Future Fights Over Asiatic Markets Might End Civilization

War between the English speaking peoples in the years to come may spel lthe end of the white man's civilization, Dr. Will Durant, author of the "Story of Philosophy," declared on his arival in Minneapolis recently.

Dr. Durant came here to speak at Hennepin Avenue Methodist Episcopal church on the subject "Is Our Civilization Dying?"

"The end of our civilization may be a war to the death between the English speaking peoples for the right to sell automobiles and toothpicks and iceboxes to the Chinese," Dr. Durant said. "We would necessarily emerge victorious from a war with the Jananese, but if we should, then we would confront the English on the continent of Asia."

Present day developments in Asia come from imeprialist expansion and the quest for markets, Dr. Durant declared. Historically, nations are certain to fight for the markets they want when they are cut off from them.

Dr. Durant points out that there is one alternative to imperialist war and the fight for foreign markets, fields of expansion and the penetration of backward areas This, he said, is the absorption, by the home market, of the goods produced by home industry.

Telephonic Atmosphere

In the Arctic regions people can talk to one another quite well when they are as much as a mile apart—the cold, dense air, and the smooth surface of the ice and snow both being helpful to the carrying of sound.

BUDGET BALANCE MUST WAIT, SAYS THOMAS

New York—In a radio debate with Henry H. Curran over station WEVD, Norman Thomas, Socialist leader, characterized the demands of Mr. Curran's National Economy League for a balanced national budget as "waste of time until they tell us in plain terms how they will take care of the unemployed."

He referred to the petition addressed to the President and Congress Dec. 17 by the National Economy League on behalf of its 250,000 members demanding "drastic reduction of future emergency expenditures and such additional taxation as may then be required to cover all expenditures by receipts."

Thomas admitted the "real perils that lie in the way of a budget unbalanced over a considerable of years and especially the dangers of any great inflation."

"There is no way under the sun, however, to balance the budget and take care of the unemployed," he went on. "Theoretically it might be posisble to do it, but only at the price of income and inheritance taxes and a capital levy such as the advocates of the balanced budget would hysterically repudiate."

GOVERNOR FLOYD B. OLSON WRITES FOR ST. PAUL DAILY NEWS

Floyd B. Olson, Minnesota's militant governor, has become a columnist for the St. Paul Daily News.

Under the title "The Governor Speaks," Mr. Olson is contributing a daily interpretative article concerned with his "cooperative commonwealth" plans, his left wing legislative program, and his defense of the Farmer-Labor party now under fire by an unfriendly legislative majority.

It is the first time, according to Howard Kahn, editor of the Daily News, that the governor of a state has been enlisted as a regular columnist on a newspaper.

An editorial carried in the two-column box-heading the column says: "This is Governor Floyd B Olson's own column. In it he has been invited to write freely on any subject he chooses. Whether or not his ideas conflict with the editorial ideas of the Daily News. No words will be changed, no censorship permitted."

Many Minnesotans regard Governor Olson as a man of destiny They see him as a President of the United States in the not-distant future. They look at his ultra-radical program as a rational movement following the breakdown of conventional government —and a sane solution to the problems growing out of depression and near desperation. They are sure that his path leads to the White House.

Another faction regards the governor as a worse demagog than Huey Long. This group feels that his desire for a complete reorganization of our social structure is a dangerous experiment.

The Daily News sees in Governor Olson a colorful and dynamic personality and in his column a feature that will be read by thousands because they support him and by other thousands because they disagree with him.

Already the column has aroused a great deal of fan mail. The Governor's defense of alleged communists on his State Board of Education was followed by a flood of letters, both for and against.

Under a speial arrangement with the publishers of the Daily News the Forum is enabled to club its subsription with the News at a very low rate and readers are invited to read the advertisement to this offer which appears elsewhere in this issue.

UNDER-PRIVILEGED TAKE BRUNT OF REPEAL EVILS

Salvation Army Reports on The Effects of Legalized Liquor

By W. G. Calderwood

Inquiries about the social and moral results of repeal as observed in their activities were sent to Salvation Army officers in all cities in the United States of 100,000 population or over. Every answer from both metropolitan and smaller cities indicates that the general social and moral conditions have suffered as the result of the release of John Barleycorn.

From Denver came the statement that drunkeness has doubled in volume, and that social conditions have suffered by the same ratio, while moral conditions have suffered much more.

The report from Philadelphia states that drunken disorders have increased more than 100 per cent, and that juvenile delinquency and broken homes have multiplied. A striking increase in the number of drunken men and women in the open-air meetings is noted.

In Milwaukee the increase in drunken disturbances around the street meetings is reported at ten to one compared with pre-repeal experience.

An increase of "at least 50 per cent" in drunkeness is reported from Fort Worth, Texas, with a ublge of 40 to 50 per cent in traffic acidents in which drinking played a part. A conservative statement of the average amount of harm done to the well-being of this group would be that their burdens and sufferings are increased by a minimum of 50 per cent.

The Salvation Army is the great field hospital for the socially and morally sick and wounded in the battle of life. More than any other organization, the Army knows the effect of liquor upon that section of the people who suffer most bitterly from it, economically as well as socially and morally.

It is generally recognized that economic recovery rests chiefly upon the lowest stratum of economic life There can be no "good times" without a full dinner pail

No man has been able to run as fast as the speediest horses. The fastest mile by a human runner was made in 4 min. 9.2 sec., or at the rate of 14.4 miles an hour.

WITH THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS

By the "Capital Reporter"

Representative Harry L. Wahlstrand author of the bill to transfer the division of re-education from the board of education to the University of Minnesota, is taken to task by M. J. Van Wegenen of the editorial board of the Allied Teachers' Guild for a statement the former issued to the press that he had been offered the position of commissioner of education but declined because he was given to understand that he would have to put radical teaching in the schools...

"When Mr. Wahlstrand wishes to be heard outside the Legislature," Mr. Van Wagenen said must he speak through R. W. Hitchcock, the steel trust editor from the iron range? When Mr. Hitchcock went on the radio last week with an alleged dramatic skit of the alleged offer to Mr. Wahlstrand, he let the cat out of the bag. He revealed Mr. Wahlstrand's attacks on the board of education for what they are* * * politics"

On the face of it, Mr. Wahlstrand's statement is ridiculous, because no one member of the board had the power to offer him the position, as he claims Mrs. Marion LeSueur did. Nobody knows this better than Mr. Wahlstrand. It is a fact that certain persons "fronted" for Mr. Wahlstrand, but an investigation by Mrs. LeSueur into his voting record in the House disclosed his reactionary tendencies. Mr. Wahlstrand belongs to the age when unseen entrenched wealth dictated what should and what should not be taught to our children . . . .

It has been charge by liberals that Mr. Wahlstrand is championing the bill to transfer the division of re-education to the University to save the job of Oscar M. Sullivan, recently discharged director. His demeanor during discussion of the bill on the Floor of the House and before the committee hearings produces a strong suspicion of intellectual dishonesty. It is hardly becoming to a man of Mr. Wahlstrand's reputed honor and integrity. . . .

Senator Steining has introduced a resolution memorializing Congress to enact universal service in case of war and to pass legislation taking the profits out of war . . . Opposition to Representative H. C. Anderson's $2,000,000 seed relief bill has developed. Opponents of the measure hope that sufficient federal aid may be received . . . .

Income tax exemption in the case of married individuals or the heads of families would be raised from $2,000 at present to $2400, in a bill introduced by Representative Ettel . . . No system of tax revision which the present Legislature can effect can go to the question of taxation of so-called tax-exempt securities, under which the rich can escape payment of taxes. This will require an amendment to the constitution, according to Senator George Sullivan. . . .

During debate before the House last week on the $1,000,000 drouth relief bill, Representative MacKinnon of University fotball fame remarked: "I am not one of those persons who has a mental antipathy to everything the minority group introduces." This is a fine quality and should put at rest rumors that MacKinnon is being groomed as a conservative floor leader to assist Brophey . . . Senator Loftsgaarden of St. Paul has introduced a far-reaching tax exemption bill. Under its provisions cemeteries, public buildings, the churches, household goods, and farm machinery would be free from taxation. . . .

Judge Keating, representing the farmers in the drouth-stricken districts, complained last week that he and his group have been given the run-around by the conservative majority faction of the House emergency relief committee. " hardly expected this horse play," Judge Keating said . . . . Representative Powers introduced a bill providing that when a constitutional amendment received 60 per cent of the votes cast for it, It would be adopted rather than a majority of all votes cast at the election . . . . Under a bill introduced by Representatives Friberg, Hagen, Stockwell and Herfindahl, would outlaw deficiency judgments in connection with real estate mortgage foreclosure sales . . . .

A $30,000 INVESTMENT BRINGS $2,000,000 RETURN

A subsidy of $30,000 from the Minnesota SERA (State Emergency relief administration) towards last year's garden and canning program stocked the dining tables and cupboards of the needy with fresh and preserved edibles worth $2,000,000, reports L. P. Zimmerman, acting administrator

Almost 19,000 garden plats were prepared and tended by more than 100,000 relief clients in the state during 1934. In homes and community; canneries, were preserved 1,000,000 quart jars, 200,000 tins of various sizes, and 500,000 bushels of garden produce, the report states. Both gardening and canning activities were guided by the SERA, through University of Minnesota extension specialists.

The food production resulting from the garden program will during the winter, save the relief administration considerable sums which otherwise must be spent to supply the needy with that portion of their diet.

In all probability, the SERA will this year assign $30,000 for a repetition of the 1934 gardening venture. More than 150,000 persons have already registered a willingness to take part.

GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD
Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

MEASLES

MEASLES has too long been regarded as a trivial childhood disease. Parents seem to think that every one has to have measles sooner or later, and the best thing to do is to have it soon and have it over with. It is estimated that 95 per cent of adults have had it. Just because measles does not have such a high death rates as smallpox and scarlet fever, two other diseases characterized by a rash, is no reason why we should let it continue. If we will all work together, we can stamp it out, as we have nearly succeeded in doing with smallpox.

In children over seven years measles without complications is not a serious disease. But in children under six years, particularly under three years, measles too often results in death, or the child develops pneumonia or ear infections from it, and then death may follow these diseases, or the child may sustain some other ailment that he will carry through life. Durin- an average measles year in Illinois—a measles epidemic occurs every second or third year—there were 38,000 cases, with 287 deaths. Most of the deaths were in the under six year group. This tally does not take into account the children who died from pneumonia following the attack of measles. It it had, the number of victims would have been much larger.

Measles begins as a common sore throat and head cold ailment. The child is feverish and irritable; then about the fourth day the distinctive measles rash occurs. This rash is very diffuse. It looks as if the skin had been rubbed with pale red ink. The patient is sick for at least another five days. In the case of older children who are put to bed and kept quiet and warm under a physician's care, there is little to worry about.

We do not know what causes measles. But we do know that it is contagious during the early head cold stage of the disease, before the skin rash appears. In fact, it's difficult to diagnose a head cold as the beginning stage of measles before the rash has appeared. Consequently, if there are any measles in the neighborhood and your child develops a head cold and sore throat, keep him or her isolated from other children who have not had measles. In that way you can help protect the other children.

Or there is a better way of protecting the child who has not had measles. Science has not been able to develop a vaccine against measles, as it has against smallpox and typhoid, since it does not know the causative agent of measles, but it has learned that if the blood of a person who has had measles is injected into a child who has not had measles, the child can be prevented from having the disease. If the child has been exposed to measles, the injection should be given within four days after the time of exposure, as that is the period of incubation of the disease. If the child has already reached the head cold stage, the injection will mean a less severe case than would otherwise occur.

The blood injection must be made by a physician. It is not given straight. The blood is mixed with a sterile solution of sodium citrate, which prevents the blood from clotting. The injection is then a very simple matter. Vials of sterile solution of sodium citrate are supplied by the departments of health of many states to practicing physicians free of charge.

The best blood to get comes from a person who is in the convalescent stage of the disease. Five cubic centimeters or one-sixth ounce of convalescent measles serum will protect a child from measles. If this convalescent serum is not available, then the blood of a person who has recovered from measles one to five years previously is next best. More of this blood is required. And if the blood is not available, then the blood of one of the parents or any other adult who has had the disease in childhood can be used.

A person only rarely has measles twice. Once gives immunity. The epidemics generally begin around Christmas and extend to spring. The peak of an epidemic is usually reached in late February or early March. But cases occur all the year round, and it is wise to be on the watch as soon as school begins. There were an exceptional number of cases throughout the United States last year.

We cannot emphasize too strongly that parents should make every effort to keep their children from contracting the disease, particularly children under six years of age. Also special pains should be taken to keep the child who is under par physically on account of ill health or lack of proper nourishment, from exposure to measles. Measles takes a big toll of very young children and of under-nourished children.

Isolation of a measles case prevents the spread of the disease. If through accident a young child is exposed, your physician can prevent the development of measles by using convalescent serum if he considers such a procedure advisable.

TO TELL THE TRUTH

TO tell the truth, it's difficult to tell the truth. Even George Washington must have found it a trifle difficult to tell it when his father sternly inquired who had chopped down the cherry tree. But there is something even more difficult than telling the truth. That is knowing the truth. Who, for instance, were our greatest presidents? The names of Washington and Lincoln come unhesitatingly to our lips at that question, but when we come to modern times there are divergences of opinion. Perhaps it takes sixty or seventy years to learn the truth.

A case that illustrates this was a conversation which took place shortly after the Great War between two well-meaning and enthusiastic young men. The first came to the second, his face all ablaze with a fine idea, and said:

"I don't believe what I read in the newspapers. I'll tell you what let's do. Let's start a newspaper that tells absolutely nothing but the truth."

"It's a grand idea!" asserted the second warmly. "Let's do it! In our very first editorial we'll say that Wilson was the greatest president we ever had!"

"We will not!" replied the first. "I thought you said we were going to tell nothing but the truth!"

And so the idea of a strictly truthful newspaper died aborning.

One Thing All Agree On

There are millions of citizens in the United States who agree with the first young man and millions also who agree with the second, but one thing all agree on is that it is a pleasant and patriotic thing to give a Washington's birthday dinner and keep the memory of our great first President and his sound traditions warm.

Washington was a dignified member of the community who sedulously kept up his state. He dressed well and shone in society and doubtless had good meals, too, so let's plan a bang-up Washington's birthday dinner with plenty of good things to eat. How would this do?

Iced Orange and Grapefruit Juice
French Lamb Chops
Duchesse Potatoes
Peas in Cream
Buttered Diced Beets
Hot Finger Rolls
Grapefruit, Cucumber and Pimiento Salad
Deep Dish Cherry Tarts
Coffee

Here are the Recipes

You doubtless know how to prepare most of these dishes, but here are the recipes for the salad and the dessert. The ingredients of the first are

1 No. 2 can grapefruit
1 canned pimiento
1 cucumber

Drain and chill the grapefruit. Peel the cucumber, cut it in wafer thin slices, and crisp it in ice water. Drain and arrange the grapefruit and cucumber in nests of lettuce. Decorate with strips or cubes of pimiento. Pour over a very cold French dressing to which a little grapefruit syrup and a little chopped green pepper has been added. Serves eight.

The ingredients of the dessert are:

1 No. 2 can red-pitted cherries
1/2 cup sugar
4 tbsps. flour
1 tbsp. butter
2/3 cup cherry syrup

Drain the cherries and divide them among eight deep individual tart tins or custard cups or ramekins. Mix the sugar and flour and sprinkle them over the drained cherries. Put bits of butter on top. Pour over the two-thirds cup of cherry syrup. Cut out rounds of pie pastry, cut slits in tops and press over tops of tins or custard cups or ramekins. Bake about thirty minutes, having the oven hot—425 degrees—at first, then reducing it to 350 degrees. Serves eight.

The syrup from the grapefruit in the salad is used in the first course with the orange juice. If desired, some of the cherry syrup from the cherries may also be added to this drink.*

MEASLES

MEASLES has too long been regarded as a trivial childhood disease. Parents seem to think that every one has to have measles sooner or later, and the best thing to do is to have it soon and have it over with. It is estimated that 95 per cent of adults have had it. Just because measles does not have such a high death rates as smallpox and scarlet fever, two other diseases characterized by a rash, is no reason why we should let it continue. If we will all work together, we can stamp it out, as we have nearly succeeded in doing with smallpox.

In children over seven years measles without complications is not a serious disease. But in children under six years, particularly under three years, measles too often results in death, or the child develops pneumonia or ear infections from it, and then death may follow these diseases, or the child may sustain some other ailment that he will carry through life. During an average measles year in Illinois—a measles epidemic occurs every second or third year—there were 38,000 cases, with 287 deaths. Most of the deaths were in the under six year group. This tally does not take into account the children who died from pneumonia following the attack of measles. It it had, the number of victims would have been much larger.

Measles begins as a common sore throat and head cold ailment. The child is feverish and irritable; then about the fourth day the distinctive measles rash occurs. This rash is very diffuse. It looks as if the skin had been rubbed with pale red ink. The patient is sick for at least another five days. In the case of older children who are put to bed and kept quiet and warm under a physician's care, there is little to worry about.

We do not know what causes measles. But we do know that it is contagious during the early head cold stage of the disease, before the skin rash appears. In fact, it's difficult to diagnose a head cold as the beginning stage of measles before the rash has appeared. Consequently, if there are any measles in the neighborhood and your child develops a head cold and sore throat, keep him or her isolated from other children who have not had measles. In that way you can help protect the other children.

Or there is a better way of protecting the child who has not had measles. Science has not been able to develop a vaccine against measles, as it has against smallpox and typhoid, since it does not know the causative agent of measles, but it has learned that if the blood of a person who has had measles is injected into a child who has not had measles, the child can be prevented from having the disease. If the child has been exposed to measles, the injection should be given within four days after the time of exposure, as that is the period of incubation of the disease. If the child has already reached the head cold stage, the injection will mean a less severe case than would otherwise occur.

The blood injection must be made by a physician. It is not given straight. The blood is mixed with a sterile solution of sodium citrate, which prevents the blood from clotting. The injection is then a very simple matter. Vials of sterile solution of sodium citrate are supplied by the departments of health of many states to practicing physicians free of charge.

The best blood to get comes from a person who is in the convalescent stage of the disease. Five cubic centimeters or one-sixth ounce of convalescent measles serum will protect a child from measles. If this convalescent serum is not available, then the blood of a person who has recovered from measles one to five years previously is next best. More of this blood is required. And if the blood is not available, then the blood of one of the parents or any other adult who has had the disease in childhood can be used.

A person only rarely has measles twice. Once gives immunity. The epidemics generally begin around Christmas and extend to spring. The peak of an epidemic is usually reached in late February or early March. But cases occur all the year round, and it is wise to be on the watch as soon as school begins. There were an exceptional number of cases throughout the United States last year.

We cannot emphasize too strongly that parents should make every effort to keep their children from contracting the disease, particularly children under six years of age. Also special pains should be taken to keep the child who is under par physically on account of ill health or lack of proper nourishment, from exposure to measles. Measles takes a big toll of very young children and of under-nourished children.

Isolation of a measles case prevents the spread of the disease. If through accident a young child is exposed, your physician can prevent the development of measles by using convalescent serum if he considers such a procedure advisable.

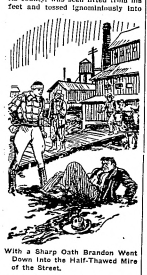
THE MAN FROM YONDER

By Harold Titus

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Ben Elliott—from "Yonder"—signalizes his entry into the lumbering town of Tincup by defeating Bull Duval, "king of the river," and town bully, in a log-birling contest. Elliott has brought along an old man, Don Stuart, who had been eager to reach Tincup, but Nicholas Brandon, the town's leading citizen, resents Stuart's presence. He tries to force him to leave town and Elliott, resenting the act, knocks him down. Elliott is arrested.

Well, now! That was something else again. Men had been coming, edging cautiously near during the brief argument between Elliott and Nicholas Brandon. But when Brandon, the man who ruled Tincup and its county, was seen lifted from his feet and tossed ignominiously into the mud, trampled by his horses, stirred by the wheels of his wagons and tractors, the street which led through the town, to his mill . . . Well, then they came a-running!



With a Sharp Oath Brandon Went Down Into the Half-Thawed Mire of the Street.

Bird-Eye cackled an impudent laugh and turned to watch the faces of the vanguard who came to see their liege lord, sprawled in the mud there, scramble to his feet. Their voices were raised in incredulity. In two decades and more no man save Bird-Eye Blaine had dared lift even his voice in Tincup in other than respect for Nicholas Brandon. And now this stranger had picked him up and thrown him away!

But Brandon was up, lurching for the sidewalk where Ben Elliott stood, legs spread, fists clenched but with good humor repossessed and grinning as he had grinned at Bull Duval; grinning as a man will who loves combat for its own sake and not at all as one who fights in red rage.

However his smile faded and his jaw settled as Brandon uplifted his face in that rush. Murder was there, in the black eyes, in the loose hanging of the lower lip, in the purple flush of his cheeks. Murder, and no less. As quickly as that homicidal look had come, it passed. Something like fear swept those eyes, driving it away. Not fear of this encounter, Ben knew; not fear of a stronger, younger man. Something else again; something entirely different. It was the sort of fear that comes from within; the kind of fear a man has for his own impulses.

Brandon halted abruptly. His fists relaxed into hands and with one of them he brushed rather aimlessly at mud on his sleeve.

A dozen men were close, then, holding back, watching, waiting, listening. Others were coming. And as Brandon halted, looking up into Elliott's face and evidently fighting for self-control, one of these new arrivals pushed to the front and came up importantly.

"What's the matter, Mr. Brandon?" he asked sharply, with the manner of one ready to render service.

Brandon did not reply at once. He settled his coat on his shoulders.

"Sheriff, arrest this young man immediately," he said then. "I'll swear to a complaint of assault and battery myself."

A sigh of relief, of disappointment, of laxing tension, or of all these combined, went up from the growing group. The sheriff turned to Elliott and touched his arm significantly.

"You'd better come along, Elliott," he said. "You took in too much territory."

Ben looked about almost foolishly. He was embarrassed and surprised. He had expected a rough-and-tumble fight in what he considered a righteous cause and surely he was the sort who would have been on familiar ground in such an encounter. But here he was, with a sheriff plucking at his sleeve!

He laughed a bit sheepishly.

"All right, Sheriff. If it's arresting you run to here in Tincup, likely I'm it!"

He turned for his pack-sack and as he did so observed old Don Stuart sitting weakly on the step of the vacant store building before which the scene had been enacted. He was obviously a sick man and trouble clouded Elliott's eyes.

"Minute, Sheriff," he said and crossed to Don, thrusting one hand into a pants pocket.

"Here, old timer," he said gently. The hand came out and into Stuart's palm he pressed a thin packet of bills and some change. "Get one of your old buddies . . . Here you!"—straightening and beckoning Bird-Eye, who approached with alacrity. "Get the old timer to a hotel. Better get a doctor, too. He's heeled enough to take care of himself a few days. After that . . . we'll see."

He turned then and fastened a severe gaze on Brandon.

"And you, chum, let him alone!" he warned. "Until a doctor says he can travel, you watch your step with him!"

But Brandon ignored this. He was buttoning his coat, pushing his way through the group, which fell aside respectfully.

"All right, Sheriff," said Ben to that worthy. "Let's go!"

CHAPTER II

ABLE ARMITAGE, justice of the peace in Tincup, looked over his spectacles into the face of the prisoner before him and a twinkle appeared in his keen blue eyes. He asked:

"Now, young man, you're charged with assault and battery on the person of Nicholas Brandon. Are you guilty?"

From the rear windows of his cluttered little office, Able had watched young Ben Elliott emerge from the status of a complete stranger to the populace to that of its latest hero by sending Mr. Bull Duval to a damp and ignominious finish in the log birling. After that he picked up an old clarinet and commenced to play a halting, aimless and not completely musical tune.

He was so occupied either with the musical performance or with his thoughts that he did not hear the tramp of many feet on the walk outside and was unaware that he was about to be called on to function in an official capacity. When the door opened, though, and Ben Elliott, Hickens, the sheriff, and Nicholas Brandon, followed, it seemed, by the total male population of the county, surged through the doorway, the clarinet's squawking leaped into a shrill squeal and died away. The judge's feet dropped to the floor and he swung his chair to face the entrance.

The sheriff stated his errand, the complaint was drawn, Nicholas Brandon affixed his signature and then for the first time Able looked closely into the face of the defendant.

It was a long and searching look and was met steadily by a pair of clear steel-gray eyes.

"Are you guilty or not?" Able repeated and Ben Elliott who had stood at ease before him, slouch hat in his great brown hands, gave his head a grave twist.

"Well, if pitching a man off the sidewalk into the mud is called assault and battery in Tincup, then I'm about a hundred per cent guilty," he said.

A stir in the room followed that and Able frowned, a convincingly judicial frown.

"Guilty, eh?" He cleared his throat at length. "Now how about this disruption of the peace, anyhow?"

The sheriff spoke.

"You see, Able, 'twas this way. Mr.—"

"Now, just a minute, Art. This accused has pleaded guilty, as I understand it. I don't see any need of anybody else saying anything. He's thrown himself on the mercy of the court, you might say, and it's regular and proper and according to the spirit of the statute that I question him before passing sentence."

The sheriff sniffed and subsided. Clearly, there was little friendship between him and the justice.

"Now, Mr. . . ." Able glanced at the complaint again. "Mr. Ben Elliott, how come that you go about the country tossing reputable citizens into the mud?"

"Why, he was trying to make a friend of mine do something he didn't want to do. That's all. I butted in, I guess; he got hard and so,"—shrug—"I lost my head for a minute and put him in his place."

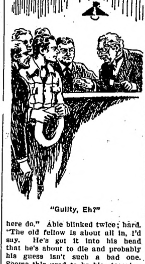
"In the mud, you mean."

"Yeah. In the mud."

"Well, go on; go on. Go back to the beginning. I want to know all about this affair."

Elliott drew a long breath.

"I started for Tincup several days ago. I was a long ways off, over in Minnesota. This morning I got down to the junction west of here and while I waited for my train got talking to this old timer, Don Stuart, who was in the station. May be you know him, Judge. Other folks here do." Able blinked twice; hard. "The old fellow is about all in, I'd say. He's got it into his head that he's about to die and probably his guess isn't such a bad one. Seems this used to be his stamping ground, that he's been away a long time and that he'd started back to finish his days here where he could see some old friends. He went broke on the way and was just sitting there this morning waiting for something to happen. I happened. I wasn't any too well heeled myself, but I had enough for his ticket so I brought him along.



"Guilty, Eh?"

"As luck would have it, I got a chance to pick up a few dollars of Tincup money as soon as we got in and I had to have it, with the old timer on my hands. While I was busy getting this cash this man Brandon evidently saw my buddy and started rushing him back to the depot to take the next train back to where he came from. I didn't like that so well. I tried to talk him out of it but Mr. Brandon isn't a greater talker. That's all. . . . Here I am!"

"Guilty as charged, eh?" Able fumbled with the papers. "What brought you such a long ways into Tincup, anyhow?"

"Because I'd heard Tincup was a tough nut to crack."

A stir in the crowd, then a sharp look from Brandon to Elliott.

"Oh. . . . Fond of nuts, are you?" Able asked and the look in his eyes was much less severe. "So you'd heard about Tincup and started for it from a long ways off and . . . Now this matter of nuts: You like all kinds?"

"Not all nuts; no." The steel-gray eyes were a bit narrowed, now, as Elliott tried to plumb the old man's mood.

"Well, for instance: like peanuts?"

"No. Can't stand 'em."

"Not at all? Almonds, then?"

A twinkle was surely coming to life in the court's eyes but, seeing it, the defendant only frowned.

"Can't vote very strong for almonds."

"Hum-m. . . . How about black walnuts?"

"Now," declared Elliott with a nod, "now, you're getting into real classy nuts!"

Men in the crowd looked at one another, not knowing what to make of this.

"Well, if you like black walnuts, would you say they were your favorite?"

The other considered this question with great, if not wholly genuine, seriousness.

"No, not exactly. I'd put black walnuts high up in the list, all right, your honor, but since you're interested about my preferences in nuts, I'd say that the best nut that ever hung outdoors or offered itself for the cracking was a good old hickory nut."

"Real tough ones, eh?"

"Real tough ones, yes."

Able wiped his face with a palm and wet his lips. The two looked long at one another and that spark passed which will jump from man to man, carried sometimes by a deed, often by a word, frequently by only a glance; that message which says as plainly as though inscribed in black characters against white background: "I like you; I am your friend!" It went from the old man to the young and back again from young to old. Nicholas Brandon understood and the lightnings in his dark eyes played more briskly, more ominously.

"And so you'd figure Tincup as a sort of hickory nut?"

HITLER'S BLOOD PATH

Berlin (TIS)—The number of executions in Nazi Germany has reached an all time height during the second half of 1934. 144 persons have been put to death, including 77 who were officially reported shot during the blood purge of June 30th, the growing underground struggle is best shown in a comparison of the above figure with the executions during the first Hitler year, 1933, which numbered 59. There were only four executions in the year preceding Hitler's seizure of power. All of the executed anti-Fascists have been workers.

Eleven persons who were sentenced to death during the 1934 committed suicide in their prison cells. 32 more persons are already sentenced to death and are awaiting their execution. The New Germany boasts at present of executioners, stationed ta Berlin, Magdeburg, Breslau, Cologne, Koenigsberg and South Germany.

The State Relief Administration Is Efficient, Evidence Before Committee Disclosed

The well-advertised and much-photographed Senate and House relief investigating committee last week made little headway in their game of looking for a mole hill of trouble in order to erect a mountain of acusations to discredit the Olson Administration.

These committees are engaged in "investigating" relief administration in Minnesota. They had hoped to find that relief is being administered by a political machine; that inefficiency prevails and that costs of administration are out of proportion to the total amount of relief money expended

They found not a shred of evidence to support any of thes charges. Instead, they found ample reasons why the federal government has expressed itself as highly pleased with relief administration in this state.

L. P. Zimmerman, acting administrator of relief, appeared before the committee and, without equivocation, answered every question put to him in such frank manner that Chairman Carley was forced to comment: "Well, I like your attitude and I want to compliment you on your testimony along that line and hope everybody else will be the same way." Mr. Zimmerman's attitude was all the more impressive because, as a federal employee, he could have refused to subject himself to questioning On the contrary, he threw all records of his office open to the investigating committees and their representatives, including records which are not open to the public

The examination of Mr. Zimmerman must have convinced even the most skeptical that Minnesota relief funds are in excellent hands Although monthly relief expenditures increased enormously during 1934, the cost of administrating the funds did not increase in proportion. In fact, the percentage of the funds devoted to administration showed a substantial decrease. "We have had only one complaint from the federal government," said Zimmerman, "and that was that we have been too liberal in granting relief."

In response to a qestion by Senator Farnand, Mr. Zimmerman said that from July 1, 1934, when Governor Olson became relief administrator, the money appropriated by the state for direct relief was used solely and exclusively for that purpose and that NOT ONE CENT WAS USED FOR ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.

"Now, Mr. Zimmerman," the Senator continued, "since you have been in office commencing July 1, 1934, has any person or individual ever asked you to use the services of your office, either directly or indirectly, for the purpose of fostering the political candidacy of any man or woman in the state of Minnesota?" "Absolutely not," Mr. Zimmerman replied.

Mrs. Blanche La Due, member of the board of control, testified that "it is only right to have one state-wide relief administration, because public funds would be wasted in the administration other wise." This was a direct challenge to those Senators and representatives who would divorce state relief administration from federal administration, and have state relief administered by local and county units.

The Legislature completed its 5th week without having acocmplished very much of real value to the people. Hundreds of typewriters have clicked on reams of paper, dozens of committees have met, and a good deal of oratory has filled the capitol chambers but politics and the premeditated wasting of time have been the prime considerations.

Bills of a "controversial" nature, i. e. those seeking truly progressive legislation, are already being packed away in moth balls while laws having little or no bearing on the welfare of the people and bombastic resolutions to Congress are passed with a minimum of consideration.

The $10,000,000 relief bill, altered beyond recognition by conservative politicians, finally passed the House last Friday. It would transfer from the board of control to the executive council the administration of relief funds. This was a purely political move and it fits in perfectly with the strategy thus far followed by opponents of the administration.

The relief bill is to be financed from liquor tax receipts, and Senator Rockne is known to be opposed to it for that reason. Rockne has already showed his cards in connection with the $1,000,000 drouth relief bill. Both relief bills have been in the Legislature long enough to have received action but the politicians continue to conspire against the interests of the people. Rockne and the other conservatives want to abolish the state liquor commission, and they are far more interested in this than in providing relief.

The stormy debate in the House chamber on the relief bill drew comment even from the spectators' galleries. Doormen ejected one man after he had twice shouted "pass that bill!" At one stage in the debate, when spectators began applauding the speeches of liberals, Roy Dunn, majority floor leader, had a whispered talk with Speaker Johnson. A few minutes later Johnson warned the visitors that he had the power to order the galleries cleared and that applause must stop.

The motor vehicle committee of both the House and Senate have begun a study of the automobile license fee question. They were told by N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner, that a continuation of the reduction rates will save the average motorist less than 10c a week. On the other hand it will cost the State the loss of $7,000,000 of federal aid and the loss of a $14,000,000 employment program on state highways.

Asked whether Congress is not likely to waive the requiremen that federal highway aid be matched with state funds, Mr. Elsberg answered that President Roosevelt has specifically warned the various state legislatures that the matching policy has been decided upon.

If normal license fees are restored, Mr. Elsberg said, about 15,000 persons will be given employment who otherwise must be cared for by relief. He also pointed out that the highway department is saving the general taxpayers of the State about $2,000,000 a year through taking over 4,500 miles of county roads in 1934.

With a trunk system of 11,000 miles to maintain the department needs normal revenue, he stated

The deadline for the payment of automobile licenses has been moved up to March 15.

The question as to whether the Legislature or Governor Olson has the power of appointing the board of regents at the University of Minnesota becomes increasingly important, in view of the plans of the conservatives to make that institution free from liberal influence. Conservative control of the University means curtailment of academic freedom; that has been the history of educational institutions throughout the country Court action to determine who has the power of appointment is certain.

At a joint session of the Senate and the House the following were elected regents: George W. Lawson, St. Paul; Ray Quinlivan, St. Cloud; Dr. A. E. Olson, Duluth; Dr. William Mayo, Rochester; Albert Pfaender, New Ulm; Fred B. Snyder, Minneapolis; John G. Williams, Duluth, and Frank W. Murphy, Wheaton. All but Murphy were nominated by a joint committee. Lawson, Olson and Murphy are administration appointees of two years ago and were supported by the liberal minority. Liberals also voted for Dr. Mayo.

Higher Yields From Treatment of Seeds

campaign to warn farmers of the risk and to help them devise plan for applying seed treatment.

Discussing the diseases which can be controlled by chemical treatment and the methods of treating, Mr. Allison emphasized that treating small grain seed is less complicated and takes less equipment than was the case a few years ago. These treatment used to involve different methods different chemicals, and different equipment. Now a single organ mercury dust, applied the same to all grains, gives excellent results for about 2 to 2½ cents a bushel.

This mercury dust will give effective control of both loose and covered smut in oats, stinking smut of wheat, and such seed-borne barley diseases as covered smut ,black loose smut, stripe and seedling blight resulting from scab. For brown loose smut of barley the only effective known treatment is hot water, a method not practical on most farms, tho succesfully used at community treating stations, such as creameries, where live steam and suitable equipment are available.

For farmers who prefer them, some of the other treating materials and methods give good results. Among them are liquid formaldehyde for oats smut, and for covered smut, black loose smut, and seedling blight of barley; and copper carbonate dust for wheat smut.

The State Relief Administration Is Efficient, Evidence Before Committee Disclosed

The well-advertised and much-photographed Senate and House relief investigating committees last week made little headway in their game of looking for a mole hill of trouble in order to erect a mountain of acusations to discredit the Olson Administration.

These committees are engaged in "investigating" relief administration in Minnesota. They had hoped to find that relief is being administered by a political machine; that inefficiency prevails and that costs of administration are out of proportion to the total amount of relief money expended.

They found not a shred of evidence to support any of these charges. Instead, they found ample reasons why the federal government has expressed itself as highly pleased with relief administration in this state.

L. P. Zimmerman, acting administrator of relief, appeared before the committee and, without equivocation, answered every question put to him in such frank manner that Chairman Carley was forced to comment: "Well, I like your attitude and I want to compliment you on your testimony along that line and hope everybody else will be the same way." Mr. Zimmerman's attitude was all the more impressive because, as a federal employee, he could have refused to subject himself to questioning. On the contrary, he threw all records of his office open to the investigating committees and their representatives, including records which are not open to the public.

The examination of Mr. Zimmerman must have convinced even the most skeptical that Minnesota relief funds are in excellent hands. Although monthly relief expenditures increased enormously during 1934, the cost of administrating the funds did not increase in proportion. In fact, the percentage of the funds devoted to administration showed a substantial decrease. "We have had only one complaint from the federal government," said Zimmerman, "and that was that we have been too liberal in granting relief."

In response to a question by Senator Farnand, Mr. Zimmerman said that from July 1, 1934, when Governor Olson became relief administrator, the money appropriated by the state for direct relief was used solely and exclusively for that purpose and that NOT ONE CENT WAS USED FOR ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.

"Now, Mr. Zimmerman," the Senator continued, "since you have been in office commencing July 1, 1934, has any person or individual ever asked you to use the services of your office, either directly or indirectly, for the purpose of fostering the political candidacy of any man or woman in the state of Minnesota?" "Absolutely not," Mr. Zimmerman replied.

Mrs. Blanche La Due, member of the board of control, testified that "it is only right to have one state-wide relief administration, because public funds would be wasted in the administration other wise." This was a direct challenge to those Senators and representatives who would divorce state relief administration from federal administration, and have state relief administered by local and county units.

The Legislature completed its 5th week without having acocmplished very much of real value to the people. Hundreds of typewriters have clicked on reams of paper, dozens of committees have met, and a good deal of oratory has filled the capitol chambers but politics and the premeditated wasting of time have been the prime considerations.

Bills of a "controversial" nature, i. e. those seeking truly progressive legislation, are already being packed away in moth balls while laws having little or no bearing on the welfare of the people and bombastic resolutions to Congress are passed with a minimum of consideration.

The $10,000,000 relief bill, altered beyond recognition by conservative politicians, finally passed the House last Friday. It would transfer from the board of control to the executive council the administration of relief funds. This was a purely political move and it fits in perfectly with the strategy thus far followed by opponents of the administration.

The relief bill is to be financed from liquor tax receipts, and Senator Rockne is known to be opposed to it for that reason. Rockne has already showed his cards in connection with the $1,000,000 drouth relief bill. Both relief bills have been in the Legislature long enough to have received action but the politicians continue to conspire against the interests of the people. Rockne and the other conservatives want to abolish the state liquor commission, and they are far more interested in this than in providing relief.

The stormy debate in the House chamber on the relief bill drew comment even from the spectators' galleries. Doormen ejected one man after he had twice shouted "pass that bill!". At one stage in the debate, when spectators began applauding the speeches of liberals, Roy Dunn, majority floor leader, had a whispered talk with Speaker Johnson. A few minutes later Johnson warned the visitors that he had the power to order the galleries cleared and that applause must stop.

The motor vehicle committee of both the House and Senate have begun a study of the automobile license fee question. They were told by N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner, that a continuation of the reduction rates will save the average motorist less than 10c a week. On the other hand it will cost the State the loss of $7,000,000 of federal aid and the loss of a $14,000,000 employment program on state highways.

Asked whether Congress is not likely to waive the requirement that federal highway aid be matched with state funds, Mr. Elsberg answered that President Roosevelt has specifically warned the various state legislatures that the matching policy has been decided upon.

If normal license fees are restored, Mr. Elsberg said, about 15,000 persons will be given employment who otherwise must be cared for by relief. He also pointed out that the highway department is saving the general taxpayers of the State about $2,000,000 a year through taking over 4,500 miles of county roads in 1934.

With a trunk system of 11,000 miles to maintain the department needs normal revenue, he stated.

The deadline for the payment of automobile licenses has been moved up to March 15.

The question as to whether the Legislature or Governor Olson has the power of appointing the board of regents at the University of Minnesota becomes increasingly important, in view of the plans of the conservatives to make that institution free from liberal influence. Conservative control of the University means curtailment of academic freedom; that has been the history of educational institutions throughout the country. Court action to determine who has the power of appointment is certain.

At a joint session of the Senate and the House the following were elected regents: George W. Lawson, St. Paul; Ray Quinlivan, St. Cloud; Dr. A. E. Olson, Duluth; Dr. William Mayo, Rochester; Albert Pfaender, New Ulm; Fred B. Snyder, Minneapolis; John G. Williams, Duluth, and Frank W. Murphy, Wheaton. All but Murphy were nominated by a joint committee. Lawson, Olson and Murphy are administration appointees of two years ago and were supported by the liberal minority. Liberals also voted for Dr. Mayo.

campaign to warn farmers of the risk and to help them devise plan for applying seed treatment.

Discussing the diseases which can be controlled by chemical treatment and the methods of treating, Mr. Allison emphasized that treating small grain seed is less complicated and takes less equipment than was the case a few years ago. These treatment used to involve different methods different chemicals, and different equipment. Now a single organic mercury dust, applied the same to all grains, gives excellent results for about 2 to 2½ cents a bushel.

This mercury dust will give effective control of both loose and covered smut in oats, stinking smut of wheat, and such seedborne barley diseases as covered smut ,black loose smut, stripe and seedling blight resulting from scab. For brown loose smut of barley the only effective known treatment is hot water, a method not practical on most farms, tho succesfully used at community treating stations, such as creameries, where live steam and suitable equipment are available.

For farmers who prefer them, some of the other treating materials and methods give good results. Among them are liquid formaldehyde for oats smut, and for covered smut, black loose smut, and seedling blight of barley; and copper carbonate dust for wheat smut.

SEED TREATING IS IMPORTANT, SAYS SPEAKER

Smut Is Becoming Prevalent On Wheat, Oats and Barley

Treating seed grain always pays and will pay especially well this year, farmers and elevator men were told at the seed treating meeting held in the county last Tuesday. C. C. Allison, representing the AAA and the State Agricultural College Extension Service, was the speaker and the meeting was held at the Thief River Falls court house.

Seed treatment results in higher yields and better quality of grain crops and is good crop insurance, Mr. Allison said. He went on to say that most of the barley and oats available for seed is heavily smutted and that considerable reduction in yield and quality is to be expected unless all such seed is carefully treated In many sections wheat is heavily smutted and treatment is urged.

Mr. Allison emphasized the fact that all of the smuts consist of different races or strains. These strains differ in the amount of smut they can produce on certain varieties. This year there is a great danger of introducing on seeds strains and races of smuts which may be more virulent than those already present in the county.

Because of the fact that additional strains or races of plant diseases may be introduced on seed, and that it is known that most of the seed grain available is smutty, the Federal government through the AAA is cooperating with the State Agricultural Extension service in a campaign to warn farmers of the risk and to help

PROWLERS LOSE TO E. G. FORKS FRIDAY AT E. G. F.

Crookston Nearly Upsets the Prowlers in Basketball Tuesday Nite

The prowlers finally took a short-end of the score in a game with East Grand Forks last Friday night at East Grand Forks. After the Prowlers had led throughout the game the E. G. Forkers came from behind in the closing minutes scoring five points in succession to win the game by a score of 33 to 31. Fans from this vicinity stated that the E. G. F. team shot from all over the floor and made a remarkably high percentage of the attempted baskets in the closing minutes.

Tuesday evening the Prowlers very nearly lost another game, this time to a much improved Crookston quint. The Prowlers took an early lead and held it to the half time with the score being 9 to 6 at the end of the third quarter the local bunch still held a small lead this time of 17 to 14. With about five minutes left to play the Crookston boys stepped out and ran their score up to 21 while the Thief River team were held scoreless Kielty, Prowler forward, scored a field goal, added to that with a gift shot, and Mickelson, Prowler guard, put the game "on ice" by scoring another field goal, which put the Thief River Falls team on the long end of a 22 + 21 score.

Friday evening the Prowlers will meet Bemidji at the Auditorium in a return game; the first game being won by Thief River by a very small margin and indications all point to a very exciting game tomororw night. As an "added attraction" Newfolden will tangle with the Prowler "B" team. The Newfolden game will start at 7:15 P. M. and the main go will start at 8:15 P. M.

2315 Job Seekers in District on Feb. 15

Figures obtained from Howard Davison of the local National Reemployment Service revealed that there are now 2315 persons registered in this district which is comprised of eight counties, Roseau, Kittson, Marshall, Pennington Red Lake, Polk, Clay, and Norman counties.

Of the 2315 people registered for jobs only 175 of them are women and 267 of the men are World War veterans. These figures are low because two of the counties have not reported their standing as of Feb. 16. There have been 18 new registrations, 267 renewals, 29 placements, 39 referrals, 57 interviews, and 19 employer contacts during the past fiscal week without the report of the two counties. 28 of the 29 placements were with private employers; the past week has been abnormally low, according to Mr. Davidson due to the fact that there is a seasonal slump which always occurs between the end of the winter season and the begining of the spring season.

Reports of the activities of the district office will be given at regular intervals to enable those who are interested on compiling data on the trend of the times to be better able to observe the employment situation.

YOUTH DEMANDS POPULAR VOTE ON WAR ENTRY

St. Paul Congress Indorses the Lundeen Bill and Thirty Hour Week

350 young people from ten midwest states agreed that the danger of war and the prevalence of unemployment are youth's two greatest enemies in a world that offers them little future, when they met at the Hotel Frederic, St. Paul last week-end, February 9th and 10th. Delegates to the Congress took the stand that they would never bear arms in or support an imperialist war.

Speakers at the Congress included Governor Floyd B. Olson, John Strachey, noted English economist and former member of parliament Professor Benjamin Lippincott of the University of Minnesota, and John Beach of the Farmers' Holiday Association.

The Congress was attended by members of the Minnesota Junior Farmer-Labor Association, the Wisconsin Young Progresisve League, the Farmers' Holiday Association, the Youth Section of the United Farmers' League, the Farmers Emergency Relief Committee of South Dakota, the National Student League, the YMCA, the YWCA, the Iowa Farmer-Labor Association, and many other Midwest organizations.

Governor Olson told the delegates, "It is my hope that through the idealism and enthusiasm of youth there may eventually emerge a united front with a united program. Youth must be militant in its demands for a system based on co-operation rather than exploitation."

The formal declaration of principles stated, "We do not believe hat the fundamental problems before us are youth problems, but that these are the general problems of the majoity of farmers and workers and must be solved by united action of us all." The statement concluded, "We want a youth movement that will work to wipe out war and fascism and work for economic security and an economic order that shall do away with oppression of man by man."

The delegates felt that if they were going to be asked to fight in a war for democracy there should

IHLE NAMED AS AGENT TO RENT COUNTY LANDS

Will Handle Leases for Rent Of Tax Delinquent Lands In County

It was announced Monday by the county auditor, H. L. Fowler, that the rental of Tax Delinquent lands in Pennington county will be hadled by O. L. Ihle temporarily. The hiring of someone to handle this matter was made necessary by a court decision which was handed down last week on the Berve salary cut case by Judge M. A. Brattland.

Mr. Ihle was chosen to handle this business because of his past experience in land appraisals; his job will consist of determining a fair rental price for the land and contacting persons interested in renting the parcel and then turning the leases over to the County Attorney who will bring the leases into district court, where they will be passed on by the district judge

A bill is being introduced in the legislature which would clear up similar situations all over the state where the counties find that under the old law "as it is," all the rentals of tax delinquent lands must be approved by the district court. By taking these cases out of the district court much of the "red tape" of renting county lands would be removed by letting the county board appoint a land agent for the county, acocrding to Mr Fowler. When the present law was passed there were only a few parcels of land in the state that were tax delinquent and this did not place very much of a [illegible] on the county atorney, who is the only one allowed to practice in the district court. The situation as it now presents itself necessitates action of some kin d to relieve the burden now placed upon the district court and county attorney Mr. Fowler stated.

F-L Club Holds Regular Meeting on Friday Eve.

The Thief River Falls Farmer-Labor Club held its regular meeting on Friday evening, Feb. 15 Only a few members were in attendance and routine business was transacted. The treasurer's books were audited, an auditing committee composed of Arthur Rambeck, Herman A. Kjos and R. M. Aalbu being appointed by the president. A motion was made, seconded and passed transferring $35.00 of the club's funds to the treasury of the county organization.

The next meeting of the organization will be held on Friday, March 15, at which time a program of speakers and other entertainment will be arranged and lunch will be served after the meeting. The regular election of officers will also be held at that time and all members are urged to attend.

E. A. who will attend the convention next fall.

House Elections Committee Report Sustains Waldal in Election Contest

By R. M. Aalbu

The reactionary House Elections committee has turned in a report sustaining Marius Waldal, who was seated as representative from the 65th district thru the issuance of a certificate of election by secretary of state Mike Holm based on a false election return from Clearwater county. The matter will be fought out on the floor of the House in the near future. Farmer-Labor members will put up a hard fight for their veteran colleague but it is expected that the Rule and Ruin Gang in control of the House organziation will crack the whip over its "Independent Progressive" majority and the "Orator of Emardville" will keep the seat.

We suggest that the voters in Marshall county in particular watch the vote of their representative on this question. Investigation has shown that Mr. Green evidently intends to support Waldal, in spite of the fact that Day's election has been legally established in court. Mr. Day was the first member whom Mr. Green approached for assistance in the Marshall county Bonding Bill matter two years ago. Mr. Day thru his wholehearted support of the measure lined up the progressive house organization for the bill and the Liberal house majority voted solidly for the measure.

The Highlanding Farmer-Labor club held its regular meeting on Friday, February 15. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

THEIGE, NELSON ARE NAMED ON CREAMERY B'D.

Stockholders Vote Decisively To Continue With the Land O' Lakes

The Thief River Falls Cooperative Creamery held its annual meeting in the Sons of Norway hall on Saturday, Feb. 16, with an attendance of stockholders and visitors which packed the spacious hall.

President Hans Anton called the meeting to order and introduced C. M. Pesek, assistant state dairy and food commissioner who gave a short talk on the necesity for an adequate cream grading law, in order that the standard of Minnesota butter may be raised. He recommended a bill which is now before the Minnesota legislature, (H. F. 427) which will specify three grades, namely: sweet, grade one and grade two. The law would provide that there be a spread of not less than one cent between the prices paid for butterfat in the several grades. A resolution was adopted at the conclusion of Mr. Pesek's talk urging the adoption of the law.

The report of the manager, Mr. G. S. Bergland, showed a large increase in the volume of business over last year. 300 patrons are delivering to the institution the report states, and 1,254,832 pounds of cream, containing 337,731 pounds of butterfat at an average test of 26.9 has been purchased. The average net price paid for butterfat was 24.86c. The cost of manufacture was 2.556c per pound and the average price received for butter was reported at 23.61c. 105,661 pounds of butter was sold locally for which the sum of $25,333.59 net was received.

The total income from dairy products was listed at $59,118.61 while the cost of butterfat was $54,445.04. The gross profit was listed at $14,-668.27. Manufacturing costs and general expenses amounted to $15,-142.40 showing a net loss on dairy products of $1,674.13. This loss was more than made up on sale of cheese, buttermilk and rental of extra space in the creamery building and other sources of income which amounted to $1,616.44, leaving a net gain available for distribution or surplus after the divid end had been paid on the capital stock of $385.31.

Heat which has been generated during the past months over the proposed sale of the creamery building to the Land O'Lakes cropped to the surface after the reading of the manager's report when L. O. Stenseth demanded explanation of the wide discrepancy between the depreciation on the building in this year's report as compared with the reports of past years. President Anton explained that a large depreciation reduction was made in 1932 following a revaluation of the building by Nels Olson, then a member of the city council and that this revaluation saved the association something like $500 in taxes. Stenseth commended the board for having secured a better rental of the surplus space this year. The report showing rental income of over one thousand dollars as compared with a little over $400 last year, he said.

On proceding to elect two members of the board the following were placed in nomination: Gordon Olson, J. M. Theige, Carl Beirwinger, Chris Nelson and Ole Helgeland. Mr. Helgeland withdrew and balloting resulted in 57 votes for Theige; 46 each for Beiswinger and Nelson and 36 for Olson. Beiswinger withdrew in favor of Nelson and Theige and Nelson were declared elected.

On motion by Mr. Stenseth the question of withdrawing from the Land O'Lakes marketing organization was balloted on. The results were 35 in favor of withdrawal and 57 against.

Agassiz Club Holds Meeting at R. L. F.

The Schoolmasters' Club held its meeting at Red Lake Falls last Thursday evening at which time the name of the club was changed to the Agassiz club. Dr. J. Rockwell, state commissioner of education, was present at the meeting and gave a discussion on the legislation which is being recommended to the legislature by the Department of Education during the 1935 session.

At noon Thursday Dr. Rockwell was a guest of the Thief River Falls faculty and the Board of Education at a lunch-meeting at the Evelyn Hotel at which time he addressed the group assembled.

Nan Larson, who is employed in Red Lake Falls, and Earl McFarland visited Sunday at the Larson's home in this city.

MARCH 1 GOOD DATE TO BEGIN FARM RECORD, FARM SPECIALIST SAYS

March 1 is a very convenient date for farmers to begin keeping records and accounts, says S. A Engene, extension farm management specialist, University Farm St. Paul. He advises every farmer not keeping records now to begin at once.

"Making a record of the amount and value of all farm property owned at the beginning and end of the record year is an important part of any worth while record system," Mr. Engene says. "Such an inventory can be taken easier and more accurately on or about March 1 than at any other time of the year, because most of the farm feed supply has then been fed; the surplus livestock marketed, and the seed supply cleaned and sacked.

March 1 is also the beginning of the lease period on the majority of rented farms in Minnesota, and is also nearly the beginning of the cropping season.

"Good farm records started now will enable the farmer to measure more accurately the success of his year's business; to determine more accurately the source of his profits and losses; and to plan his future farm operations more intelligently. They will also help him to prove compliance with his 1935 agricultural adjustment contracts and to establish claims for production allotments and benefit payments under any new contracts which may be offered.

" The AAA farm record book, a copy of which can be obtained free by every farmer from the county gariculturai agent, contains convenient forms for recording farm income and expenditures; inventories of farm property at the beginning and end of the year; acreages and yields of all farm crops planted and harvested; and the number of pigs farorwed on the farm. Every farmer who has not yet received his copy should apply for it at once."

Winter Spawning Done at State Fish Hatcheries

Seasonal Spawning operations were completed at all of the state fish hatcheries during the month of January except at Lanesboro where it is estimated that 100,000 additional rainbow trout eggs were taken so far this month Propagation activities included brook, brown, rainbow, Loch Leven, and lake trout and whitefish.

At the close of January the state fish hatcheries contained a total of 69,178,178 eggs and fry. Whitefish headed the list with a total of 58,365,799. There were 3,265,978 lake trout and 7,546,401 stream trout.

Eggs retained at Lanesboro are hatching with only a normal loss. Dr. Thaddeus Surber superintendent of fish propagation for the state Division of Game and Fish said. It was necessary to transfer large quantities of eggs from Lanesboro to French River and Redby. Abrupt changes of water temperatures occasioned by this transfer resulted "in considerable loss far above the average."

"Whitefish eggs retained at the Redby hatchery have eyed with normal loss," Dr. Surber said. "Those transfered to French River produced under 70 percent of eyed eggs."

Besides state hatcheries at Lanesboro, French River and Redby, others are located at St. Paul St. Peter, Glenwood and Detroit Lakes.

BEWARE OF UNADAPTED FORAGE CROP SEEDS

Pitfalls aplently beset the man who has to buy seed, but one of the worst mistakes is to get seeds that come from foreign lands or from far-away state, so that the varieties are poorly adapted, warns A. C. Arny, field crops specialist, University Farm, St. Paul.

Red clover is one kind of seed farmers often "get stung on" because a lot of seed is imported from foreign countries. Canadian clover seed is satisfactory for Minnesota, but that from France, Italy, Chile and most other foreign countries is not fit for use here. Rather than use such nonhardy, imported red clover, it would be better for farmers to seed down larger acreages of alfalfa and sweet clover, says Mr. Arny.

Recent experiments by the U. S. Department of Agriculture show that clover plants from imported seed are neither as winter hardy nor as resistant to disease and insect enemies as local varieties. In general, says the Department, red clover diseases are most severe where winters are mild, as in such southern states as Kentucky, Virginia and Tennessee. European clovers are much more susceptible to leaf hopper attacks than the hairy, American type.

Southern grown alfalfa seed is another thing for Minnesota farmers to avoid, says Mr. Arny. Even in the southern part of the state, Kansas alfalfa seed does not compare favorbaly with northern seed while for central and northern Minnesota only Grimm and Ladak are recommended. When alfalfa to be mixed with timothy and relied on only for one year. Kansas seed may justifiably be used providing it is considerably cheaper than northern seed. Otherwise there is no place in Minnesota for Kansas or other southern grown alfalfa seed, Mr. Arny adds.

When it comes to millet and Sudan grass, southern grown seed will do for hay only. When it is desired to mature these crops for seed, however, southern millet will not do at all and northern grown Sudan will be better than that from the south.

Mr. Arny says another "don't" is don't buy seed containing dangerous weed seeds. One seed of a noxious weed per pound or per bushel is one too many when the expense of eradication is kept in mind. The State Seed Laboratory, University Farm, St. Paul makes purity and germination tests free for a farmer on any number of samples up to 10 County agents can advise about taking and sending samples.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REGULATES LIQUOR ADS

Free Rein Given to Advertising Which Tends to Increase Drinking

By W. G. Calderwood

News comes from Washington that advertisers of liquor must, in the future, watch their steps in connection with any advertising or paid publicity. New regulations have been promulgated by Joseph H. Choate, Jr., director of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, which provide that no advertisement may be published that is untrue or that tends to mislead by ambiguous or inferential statements. Nor must the advertisement be in any way at variance with the statements on the label Moreover, the label itself must not mislead by carrying any statement that will deceive the purchaser For example, it must not have Kentucky on the label unless the liquor so labelled was actually made in Kentucky.

There is a specific prohibition of any statement or claim that a liquor has "curative or therapeutic effects," which tend to create misleading impressions.

In the advertising of beer, the use of such terms as "full strength," "high-test," "prewar strength," etc., is prohibited; neither the actual alcoholic strength be stated, in such phrases as "3.2 per cent," "5 per cent," or similar expressions, nor is any statement concerning the percentage or quality of malt extract used in the manufacture permissible.

These regulations control advertisements in magazines, newspapers, circulars, signs, posters booklets, advertising specialties radio broadcasts, menus, or other printed or graphic material.

Advertisements of manufacturers and wholesalers of distilled liquors in magazines, newspapers and all periodical publications must be submitted to the FACA director before publication, but retail dealers are not subject to this regulation.

In the discussion of the regulation of liquor advertising immediately after repeal, rigid prohibition of any copy that would tend to increase the use of intoxicants was proposed, but the present regulations lay no restraint upon the use of high-pressure sales advertising.

Plummer High Enjoys Party

The Plummer high school held an informal dancing party in the village hall following the basketball game on Saturday night. Music was furnished by the Martin's of ths cty and lunch was furnishby the Junior classes. Mrs. John Norby and Mrs. Margaret LaVoy served the lunch. The St. Hilaire basketball team and followers of the team were the guests of the evening. A large crowd attended and had a thoroughly enjoyable time.

Cent Gas Tax Rise Would Not Match Federal Road Aid

An increase of one cent a gallon in the state gasoline taxe would increase state highway revenues by $2,000,000 a year, and would provide $1,100,000 a year for distribution to the counties for use on county aid roads, says a highway department bulletin.

On the other hand, restoration of the automblile license fees to the 1932 normal level would provide probably more than $3,500,000 for the trunk system.

An increase of about $3,800,000 in annual revenues of the highway department is needed if Minnesota's allotment of federal aid for this year and next is to be matched, the department estimates. A cent increase in the gas tax would therefore fall about $1,600,000 short of meeting federal aid requirements. The federal government has offered Minnesota nearly $7,000,000 for a highway employment program this summer and next, provided Minnesota puts up an equal amount.

Safety Program Is Outlined At Traffic Safety Banquet

Program designed to keep motor vehicle fatalities in Minnesota at the lowest possible minimum was placed before legislators, government officials and outstanding safety experts of the country Monday night when Governor Floyd B. Olson, at an impressive dinner in St. Paul awarded plaques to the winners of the 1934 Minnesota Traffic Safety Contest.

Outlined following an intensive study and analysis of the causes of every motor vehicle accident in Minnesota in which a fatality occurred, the program was worked out and presented in a report by A. V. Rohweder, of Duluth, chairman of the Minnesota Public Safety Committee, the advisory body which directed the accident study

High points of the recommendations made in Mr. Rohweder's report were:

Establishment of a complete reporting system of all traffic accidents involving injury or death.

Improvements in the physical characteristics of streets and highways.

Proper mechanical inspection and maintenance of motor vehicles.

Continuation of public safety education in homes, schools, factories and farms.

Continuance of the valuable support given the safety movement by newspapers.

Enforcement of traffic laws and cooperation by courts.

Adoption of a standard Drivers License Law as recommended by the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety of the U. S Department of Commerce and the National Safety Council.

The report gives what is regarded as the most complete analysis of traffic accidents ever developed in this country. The Minnesota Public Safety Committee analyzed the causes of 628 deaths occurring on public highways. Thirteen additional traffic accident fatalities occurred on private property, making a total of 641 motor vehicle deaths in 1934 as compared with 574 in 1933.

The report includes charts showing the types of accidents hours of occurrence, general location of the accidents, number killed in collision with fixed objects and what each driver was doing such as "in a hurry" turning right passing on curve or hill. The persons killed and drivers involved are classified by age groups. The physical condition of each driver was noted, as was the condition of pedestrian killed. The condition of vehicles involved is also charted.

The Plummer independent basketball team defeated McIntosh Independents in a hard and fast game on the local floor Sunday afternoon, 45-31. The game was well played and Plummer gained a lead early in the game and enlarged it as the game progressed

CREAM GRADING BILL IS SUBMITTED TO THE HOUSE

A committee made up of representatives of the Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food, of the University of Minnesota, and representatives of every phase of the butter manufacturing industry in the State of Minnesota have agreed upon and prepared a bill which has been presented to the State Legislature, which has for its purpose the elimination of unfair practices in testing and weighing cream and milk and establishes a definite program for grading of these products when delivered by the farmer.

This bill, which carries H. F. No. 427, is the result of a lot of hard work on the part of the committee and could well be considered in other states that will be considering legislation of this kind during their winter sessions. The following is a summary of the high points that have been considered by the committee as the basis of legislation to take care of the matter of grading, weighing and testing of cream and milk:

The Grading Bill

For an Act in the Public Welfare, to be known as THE CREAM GRADING AND TESTING LAW. The program as outlined relates to the purchase and sale of cream for butter making; to establish grades of cream quality methods for determining such grades and provisions to insure the purchase and sale of cream and|or butterfat on the basis of established grades; to provide equitable differentials of value as between grades, necessary licensing provisions, declaring violation hereof to be unlawful and to provide penalties for violations of the provisions of the Act.

Must Buy on Grade

1. All cream and|or butterfat sold and|or purchased for butter manufacturing purposes shall be graded and paid for on the basis of the following grades:

Sweet cream grade shall consist of fresh, clean, fine-flavored cream, the acidity of which calculated as lactic acid shall at no time have exceeded .25 percent in cream or .3 percent in the cream serum.

Grade One shall consist of cream that is clean, free from undesirable odors and flavors. the acidity of which calculated as lactic acid shall, at no time have exceeded .7 per cent at the time and place of purchase.

Grade Two shall consist of cream that is too acid to grade as Grade One and-or contains undesirable odors and flavors in a moderate degree.

Unlawful cream shall consist of cream which contains dirt, filth, or other foreign mater which makes it unfit for human consumption.

Must Tag and Color Unfit Cream

2. All licensed cream buyers shall affix to the container of condemned unlawful cream, condemnation tags provided by the Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food, and shall also place in such unlawful cream a harmless, permanent coloring matter so as to prevent the said unlawful cream from being sold for human consumption.

3. The cream buyer shall ship all cream purchased by him direct to a butter manufacturing plant within twenty-four hours of the time of purchase of said cream except where acts of Providence beyond his control prevent compliance with this provision.

4 All purchases and-or sales of cream for butter-making purposes shall be on the basis of the grades hereinbefore defined. Grade One cream must be paid for at a minimum of one cent per pound butterfat less than the Sweet Cream Grade. Grade Two cream must be paid for at a minimum of one cent per pound butterfat less than the Grade One cream, and-or a minimum of two cents per pound butterfat less than the Sweet Cream grade. The daily current price being paid for each grade shall be posted in a prominent place in each cream-buying station and creamery.

Sediment Test Must Be Made

5. A minimum of one sediment test per month must be made of the cream of each producer patron of a creamery or of any cream buyer. If such sediment test is unsatisfactory to the buyer then successive tests on future deliveries of cream marketed must be made and must conform to the definition for Sweet Cream, Grade One or Grade Two cream before the marketer of said cream shall be entitled to receive the price being paid for the grade of cream offered.

6. A licensed cream buyer, duly qualified to grade and test cream, shall be maintained in each creamery and in each cream-buying station where cream is purchased for butter-making purposes. A grading and testing license shall be issued by the Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food to such person who shal lhave passed a satisfactory examination in person and shall have proved by actual demonstration before an inspector or authorized agent of the Department that he is competent and qualified to grade and test cream and that he is fully conversant with all the requirements of this Act. Every such license, unless revoked, shall expire December 31 of each year and shall not be transferable. The fee for each such annual license shall be One Dollar ($1.00), and shall be paid to the Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food or its agent before such license or renewal thereof is issued.

Enforced by Department of Agriculture

7. The Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food shall be charged with the enforcement of the provisions of this Act, and shall have the authority to promulgate such rules and regulations as are necessary to the enforcement thereof.

8. Any violation of any of the provisions of this Act is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor, and any person, whether individually or as a member of a partnership or as an agent or officer of a corporation, who shall be convicted of such violation either on his own behalf or in the interest of any other individual or corporation association or partnership, shall be fined not less than Twenty-five Dollars ($25.00), nor more than One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) and such person's license may be revoked on second offense.

9. If any section, subdivision sentence or clause in this Act shall, for any reason, be held void or unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of any other portion of this Act."

Creameries throughout the entire Valley are getting behind the bill solidly.

SOIL EROSION CONTROL WORK TO BE CONTINUED

Assurance that Minnesota's efforts to control soil erosion will be continued this summer has been received from federal authorities according to Walter S. Olson, director of the state Division of Drainage and Waters. Advices indicate that six camps have been given approval under the program of the Civilian Corps financed with federal funds.

Soil erosion work will be continued in southeastern Minnesota where "erosion conditions are most severe," Director Olson said

Exact locations of camps have not as yet been determined but the work will be a continuation of projects undertaken in the past through Emergency Conservation Work.

Repeal was guaranteed to eliminate political corruption. But the charge is made, in a February 8 news release, that the New York state liquor board has purchased a quantity of "unknown and unsalable" whisky which would require 124 years to sell. That certainly smells of graft.

Saw Wood in Water

Sawing wood at the bottom of a giant tank filled with water, is a test given at Whale Island, Portsmouth, England, where royal navy divers are trained.

It is queer but it is true that 100 proof whisky is 50 percent alcohol; 80 proof is 40 percent alcohol. One per cent is equal to two points "proof"

Kansas voted to prohibit 3.2 beer by more than two to one.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REGULATES LIQUOR ADS

Free Rein Given to Advertising Which Tends to Increase Drinking

By W. G. Calderwood

News comes from Washington that advertisers of liquor must, in the future, watch their steps in connection with any advertising or paid publicity. New regulations have been promulgated by Joseph H. Choate, Jr., director of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, which provide that no advertisement may be published that is untrue or that tends to mislead by ambiguous or inferential statements. Nor must the advertisement be in any way at variance with the statements on the label Moreover, the label itself must no mislead by carrying any statement that will deceive the purchaser For example, it must not have Kentucky on the label unless the liquor so labelled was actually made in Kentucky.

There is a specific prohibition of any statement or claim that a liquor has "curative or therapeutic effects," which tend to create misleading impressions.

In the advertising of beer, the use of such terms as "full strength," "high-test," "prewar strength," etc., is prohibited; neither the actual alcoholic strength be stated, in such phreses as "3.2 per cent," "5 per cent," or similar expressions, nor is any statement concerning the percentage or quality of malt extract used in the manufacture permissible.

These regulations control advertisements in magazines, newspapers, circulars, signs, posters booklets, advertising specialties radio broadcasts, menus, or other printed or graphic material.

Advertisements of manufacturers and wholesalers of distilled liquors in magazines, newspapers and all periodical publications must be submitted to the FACA director before publication, but retail dealers are not subject to this regulation.

In the discussion of the regulation of liquor advertising immediately after repeal, rigid prohibition of any copy that would tend to increase the use of intoxicants was proposed, but the present regulations lay no restraint upon the use of high-pressure sales advertising.

Plummer High Enjoys Party

The Plummer high school held an informal dancing party in the village hall following the basketball game on Saturday night. Music was furnished by the Martin's of ths cty and lunch was furnished by the Junior classes. Mrs. John Norby and Mrs. Margaret LaVoy served the lunch. The St. Hilaire basketball team and followers of the team were the guests of the evening. A large crowd attended and had a thoroughly enjoyable time.

Cent Gas Tax Rise Would Not Match Federal Road Aid

An increase of one cent a gallon in the state gasoline taxe would increase state highway revenues by $2,000,000 a year, and would provide $1,100,000 a year for distribution to the counties for use on county aid roads, says a highway department bulletin.

On the other hand, restoration of the autombbile license fees to the 1932 normal level would provide probably more than $3,500,000 for the trunk system.

An increase of about $3,800,000 in annual revenues of the highway department is needed if Minnesota's allotment of federal aid for this year and next is to be matched, the department estimates. A cent increase in the gas tax would therefore fall about $1,600,000 short of meeting federal aid requirements. The federal government has offered Minnesota nearly $7,000,000 for a highway employment program this summer and next, provided Minnesota puts up an equal amount.

Safety Program Is Outlined At Traffic Safety Banquet

Program designed to keep motor vehicle fatalities in Minnesota at the lowest possible minimum was placed before legislators, government officials and outstanding safety experts of the country Monday night when Governor Floyd B. Olson, at an impressive dinner in St. Paul awarded plaques to the winners of the 1934 Minnesota Traffic Safety Contest.

Outlined following an intensive study and analysis of the causes of every motor vehicle accident in Minnesota in which a fatality occurred, the program was worked out and presented in a report by A. V. Rohweder, of Duluth, chairman of the Minnesota Public Safety Committee, the advisory body which directed the accident study

High points of the recommendations made in Mr. Rohweder's report were:

Establishment of a complete reporting system of all traffic accidents involving injury or death.

Improvements in the physical characteristics of streets and highways.

Proper mechanical inspection and maintenance of motor vehicles.

Continuation of public safety education in homes, schools, factories and farms.

Continuance of the valuable support given the safety movement by newspapers.

Enforcement of traffic laws and cooperation by courts.

Adoption of a standard Drivers License Law as recommended by the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety of the U. S. Department of Commerce and the National Safety Council.

The report gives what is regarded as the most complete analysis of traffic accidents ever developed in this country. The Minnesota Public Safety Committee analyzed the causes of 628 deaths occurring on public highways. Thirteen additional traffic accident fatalities occurred on private property, making a total of 641 motor vehicle deaths in 1934 as compared with 574 in 1933.

The report includes charts showing the types of accidents hours of occurrence, general location of the accidents, number killed in collision with fixed objects and what each driver was doing such as "in a hurry" turning right passing on curve or hill. The persons killed and drivers involved are classified by age groups. The physical condition of each driver was noted, as was the condition of pedestrian killed. The condition of vehicles involved is also charted.

The Plummer independent basketball team defeated McIntosh Independents in a hard and fast game on the local floor Sunday afternoon, 45-31. The game was well played and Plummer gained a lead early in the game and enlarged it as the game progressed

A committee made up of representatives of the Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food, of the University of Minnesota, and representatives of every phase of the butter manufacturing industry in the State of Minnesota have agreed upon and prepared a bill which has been presented to the State Legislature, which has for its purpose the elimination of unfair practices in testing and weighing cream and milk and establishes a definite program for grading of these products when delivered by the farmer.

This bill, which carries H. F. No. 427, is the result of a lot of hard work on the part of the committee and could well be considered in other states that will be considering legislation of this kind during their winter sessions. The following is a summary of the high points that have been considered by the committee as the basis of legislation to take care of the matter of grading, weighing and testing of cream and milk:

The Grading Bill

For an Act in the Public Welfare, to be known as THE CREAM GRADING AND TESTING LAW. The program as outlined relates to the purchase and sale of cream for butter making; to establish grades of cream quality methods for determining such grades and provisions to insure the purchase and sale of cream and|or butterfat on the basis of established grades; to provide equitable differentials of value as between grades, necessary licensing provisions, declaring violation hereof to be unlawful and to provide penalties for violations of the provisions of the Act.

Must Buy on Grade

1. All cream and|or butterfat sold and|or purchased for butter manufacturing purposes shall be graded and paid for on the basis of the following grades:

Sweet cream grade shall consist of fresh, clean, fine-flavored cream, the acidity of which calculated as lactic acid shall at no time have exceeded .25 percent in cream or .3 percent in the cream serum.

Grade One shall consist of cream that is clean, free from undesirable odors and flavors. the acidity of which calculated as lactic acid shall, at no time have exceeded .7 per cent at the time and place of purchase.

Grade Two shall consist of cream that is too acid to grade as Grade One and-or contains undesirable odors and flavors in a moderate degree.

Unlawful cream shall consist of cream which contains dirt, filth, or other foreign mater which makes it unfit for human consumption.

Must Tag and Color Unfit Cream

2. All licensed cream buyers shall affix to the container of condemned unlawful cream, condemnation tags provided by the Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food, and shall also place in such unlawful cream a harmless, permanent coloring matter so as to prevent the said unlawful cream from being sold for human consumption.

3. The cream buyer shall ship all cream purchased by him direct to a butter manufacturing plant within twenty-four hours of the time of purchase of said cream except where acts of Providence beyond his control prevent compliance with this provision.

4 All purchases and-or sales of cream for butter-making purposes shall be on the basis of the grades hereinbefore defined. Grade One cream must be paid for at a minimum of one cent per pound butterfat less than the Sweet Cream Grade. Grade Two cream must be paid for at a minimum of one cent per pound butterfat less than the Grade One cream, and-or a minimum of two cents per pound butterfat less than the Sweet Cream grade. The daily current price being paid for each grade shall be posted in a prominent place in each cream-buying station and creamery.

Sediment Test Must Be Made

5. A minimum of one sediment test per month must be made of the cream of each producer patron of a creamery or of any cream buyer. If such sediment test is unsatisfactory to the buyer then successive tests on future deliveries of cream marketed must be made and must conform to the definition for Sweet Cream, Grade One or Grade Two cream before the marketer of said cream shall be entitled to receive the price being paid for the grade of cream offered.

6. A licensed cream buyer, duly qualified to grade and test cream, shall be maintained in each creamery and in each cream-buying station where cream is purchased for butter-making purposes. A grading and testing license shall be issued by the Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food to such person who shal lhave passed a satisfactory examination in person and shall have proved by actual demonstration before an inspector or authorized agent of the Department that he is competent and qualified to grade and test cream and that he is fully conversant with all the requirements of this Act. Every such license, unless revoked, shall expire December 31 of each year and shall not be transferable. The fee for each such annual license shall be One Dollar ($1.00), and shall be paid to the Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food or its agent before such license or renewal thereof is issued.

Enforced by Department of Agriculture

7. The Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food shall be charged with the enforcement of the provisions of this Act, and shall have the authority to promulgate such rules and regulations as are necessary to the enforcement thereof.

8. Any violation of any of the provisions of this Act is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor, and any person, whether individually or as a member of a partnership or as an agent or officer of a corporation, who shall be convicted of such violation either on his own behalf or in the interest of any other individual or corporation association or partnership, shall be fined not less than Twenty-five Dollars ($25.00), nor more than One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) and such person's license may be revoked on second offense.

9. If any section, subdivision sentence or clause in this Act shall, for any reason, be held void or unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of any other portion of this Act."

Creameries throughout the entire Valley are getting behind the bill solidly.

SOIL EROSION CONTROL WORK TO BE CONTINUED

Assurance that Minnesota's efforts to control soil erosion will be continued this summer has been received from federal authorities according to Walter S. Olson, director of the state Division of Drainage and Waters. Advices indicate that six camps have been given approval under the program of the Civilian Corps financed with federal funds.

Soil erosion work will be continued in southeastern Minnesota where "erosion conditions are most severe," Director Olson said

Exact locations of camps have not as yet been determined but the work will be a continuation of projects undertaken in the past through Emergency Conservation Work.

Repeal was guaranteed to eliminate political corruption. But the charge is made, in a February 8 news release, that the New York state liquor board has purchased a quantity of "unknown and unsalable" whisky which would require 124 years to sell. That certainly smells of graft.

Saw Wood in Water

Sawing wood at the bottom of a giant tank filled with water, is a test given at Whale island, Portsmouth, England, where royal navy divers are trained.

It is queer but it is true that 100 proof whisky is 50 percent alcohol; 80 proof is 40 percent alcohol. One per cent is equal to two points "proof"

Kansas voted to prohibit 3.2 beer by more than two to one.

"Entered as second-class matter, April 27, 1932, at the post office at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, under Act of March 3, 1897."

Were it not for the profit system, poverty would disappear, ignorance would disappear, crime, vice and cruelty would disappear—the prison, the poorhouse, the insane asylum and the brothel would disappear. Yes, yes, my brother, and were it not for the profit system, wars would disappear and depressions and breadlines and charity and all their hideous brood would disappear. And racial hatred and arrogance and intolerance—and man's inhumanity to man would banish forever from this blood-stained planet.—Morton Alexander.

THE TURNOVER TAX MAKES ITS DEBUT

The anticipated sales tax, or as its proponents prefer to call it, the Turnover or Gross Earnings Tax, has been introduced in the state Legislature. Inasmuch as the reactionaries are in complete control of both Houses, it is assumed that it will be passed. However, the governor has vowed that he will veto any sales tax and he can be relied upon to do just what he says he will. Nevertheless, it is well for the people to analyze the Bill that has been introduced so that they may know just what the big business element would saddle upon them.

In ballyhooing for this vicious measure, the reactionaries have wept barrels of crocodile tears for the poor overburdened real estate tax payers. Inasmuch as they have in the past been most decidedly opposed to any reform of the tax structure; and have considered the outworn and antedated tax structure with which we are burdened too sacred to be changed or modified in any way, it might be interesting to look into the why and wherefore of their change of heart.

In the past the people of Minnesota have been in the main a land-owning class. The farmers owned their own farms, and the working people of the cities owned their own homes, burdened tho they both were with mortgages. And they paid the taxes on the property; all of them regardless of how small their equity might be. The Money crowd paid only the small money and credit tax on the mortgage, and a large share of that was dodged. When there was a foreclosure the land was readily sold again for a good price and some other producer took up the tax burden. Government was controlled by Big Business, and inasmuch as Big Business did not have to foot the bill, government was a prolific spender. A study of Minnesota history discloses that more and more departments of government were created during the period ending 1923. Commissions, departments, bureaus, and interim committees. Graft, corruption and fat jobs to wardheelers and wheelhorses were the order of the day.

As the tax burden increased the home and farm-owning producing class, burdened as they were, not only with their own taxes but also with the taxes of business which was passed to them in the form of increased prices on everything that they have to buy, became restless and demanded an income tax law. Big Business fought that measure with the viciousness of a cornered rat, but it has become a law after many years of battling by the people. Big Business hopes to place a sales tax on the statute books and repeal the net income tax law.

During the past few years, the ownership of real estate has been rapidly shifting from the producing class to the money class. Of the working people in the cities, from seventy-five to ninety per cent have lost their homes and they have become tenants. During this same period, millions of farmers have lost their farms and they have become tenants, since the producers are rapidly becoming a propertyless class the money interests, in order to keep the taxes on the shoulders of the so-called lower classes resort to the sales tax to do so. Banks, insurance companies and land companies are becoming owners of vast tracts of land and long lists of city property on which they must pay the taxes under our antiquated real estate taxation system. They are combining these farm lands into corporation farms of thousands of acres in extent. Two such farms are in Kittson county. A company was organized in Moorhead only a short time ago to engage in corporation farming on a large scale. Other states have corporation farms of over one hundred thousand acres in extent. More are being formed daily. They will with power machinery and high pressure methods drive the small independent farmers out of business. PROVIDING THEY CAN GET RID OF THE REAL ESTATE TAX. In their efforts in this direction they are being aided by many independent farmers who feel the weight of the tax load but who do not realize that as small scale producers they are proportionately large consumers and will therefore have to carry the tax as consumers if not as owners of real estate if a sales tax is passed.

Now to analyze the Bill that has been introduced: According to the terms of the bill "Gross Receipts" means the aggregate sum in value passing in any transaction . . . interest ,discount, rentals, royalties, dividends fees, wages, salaries, commissions and-or other emoluments, however designated without any deductions on account of cost . . . labor . . . . or any expense whatsoever" are to be taxed at the rate of one-half of one per cent. Under its provisions the aged drawing the munificent pension of $5 per month as in Pennington county, must pay a tax on it. Under these provisions the recipient of poor relief will have to pay a tax on their allotments. Employers must deduct the tax from the wages of their employees and remit the same to the county treasurer with an affidavit each trhee months. All sales, are of course, covered under the law and the workingman who has already had the tax deducted from his pay will go to the store and pay the same taxes over again as they are passed on to the consumer, one, two or three times or more accumulations amounting to from one-half of one per cent to two and three per cent. To illustrate: a commodity has one turnover as it leaves the factory and half of one per cent is added to the cost. The jobber adds his tax; the wholesaler adds his tax and the retailer adds his tax and the consumer pays them all.

So much for the consumer. How does it affect the business man?

The grocers doing business on a small margin which seldom exceeds ten per cent will pay $50 tax on $10,000 gross business, only one thousand of which is gross profit.. A clothing store, dry goods store or a jewelry store doing business on larger margins will also pay only $50 in tax on $10,000 gross business, altho their gross profit may be from $2,500 to $5,000 on the $10,000 gross turnover. And remember that from the gross profit must be paid the rent, interest, insurance and all other overhead expenses. The balance is NET profit. Inasmuch as the federal government prohibits taxing of interstate commerce the merchants who purchase from manufacturers within the state will have to pay a larger tax than those who purchase from without the state. Therefore it will discourage industry in Minnesota. For instance a chain store buying canned goods in carlots from Wisconsin will ship it to their various stores, and need add only the retail turnover. The independent merchant purchasing his canned goods from a wholesaler, who in turn buys from a jobber, who in his turn buys from a canning factory in Willmar. Red Wing, or any other Minnesota city will have to pass on to the consumer four or five turnovers, each amounting to one-half of one per cent. Needless to say the law would tend to drive all independent merchants out of existence.

Look it over, dear readers, it is S. F. No. 213 and it was introduced by Senators Cashman, Carley and Roepke. If you believe in becoming still more in the clutches of Wall Street than you are now, support it. If you don't, you had better get busy and fight it, for it is going to be passed by the Legislature unless you put up the fight of your life.

ROOSEVELT MOVED RIGHT BUT HE DIDN'T HAVE COMPANY

President Roosevelt has moved to the right and taken the left and the middle with him," wisecracks an exchange. Which might be so-ann-so as a wisecrack but is pure baloney in fact. There is no question that Roosevelt has moved to the right, if he was ever actually to the left, which we are begining to doubt very, very much. But the left is still left and more so than ever and the middle is moving left fast enough to see a few bets laid that Roosevelt will be a one-term president.

In spite of the fact that Congressman Goldborough has proven to the satisfaction of a large part of the House of Representatives that the government can if it chooses issue currency to the tune of 48 billion dollars without going off the gold standard, President Roosevelt tries to make the country believe that it would bankrupt the nation to pay the Soldier's Bonus. His latest master stroke in the art of dodging an issue by telling the ex-service men "Shush, shush boys, if you are to have the bonus, the aged can't have any pension," is about as scurvy an attempt at setting the Old Age Pension proponents at the throats of the ex-service men as ever a demagogue could devise. From now on nothing he may do or say will surprise us.

GOVERNOR OLSON; OPPORTUNIST

In our book on the Minnesota Legislature of 1933, "The Minnesota Kaleidoscope of 1933," we referred to Governor Olson as "an opportunist and strategist of the highest caliber." For that statement, or description of him we have been taken to task on one or two occasions by Farmer-Laborites who felt that it was to belittle him. It seems that to be called an opportunist is to be accused of being shallow, in the minds of some people. While we have attempted to justify the term as we used it, it has remained for the Governor himself to clarify the appelation as only he can clarify. In his speech to the Mid-West Youth Congress in the Twin Cities last week he said, "When I call myself an opportunist, I do not speak facetiously. By the term 'opportunist' I mean one who will use any agency he finds at hand, whether he believes in its entire program or not, to translate into action such part of his program as possible, however small."

THE NEW DEAL
(St .Paul Union Advocate)

All during the presidential campaign Mr. Roosevelt went before the American public to ;reach what he termed as a new philosophy of government. He spoke at great length of the "forgotten man," and promised a new deal to the toiling masses.

But this much ballyhooed "new deal" has not materialized. The NRA with its splendid guarantees to Labor has become a mere memory, and now Mr. Roosevelt has given his official sanction to a proposal to pay workers on governmental projects an average of $50 per month.

It should not be necessary to repeat the warnings of Labor on such matters, but it may be to the point to stress them again. Labor has insisted right along that whatever action the federal government takes in the matter of setting a wage scale—that scale will become the yardstick of private industry. This was true of other policies such as the Farley program of retrenchment, the laying off of thousands of government workers, the denial of vacations on full pay, the payless furloughs, the hold-backs and stretch-outs. Private industry has taken its inspiration from such policies to further depress Labor. If the government adopts a wage scale under which workers on federal jobs are to be paid $50 a month, private industry will follow suit to the utter corruption of American standards of living.

The "new deal" sounded good from the speakers' rostrum, but in its practical application it has a bad odor, an odor that suggests Hoover, Coolidge and Harding—each of whom in his time thought that the way back to prosperity was through rugged individualism, patronage and aid for the wealthy—and dry bread for the masses.

(Forest Lake Times)

Last week the newspapers throughout the country carried a short account of a 17-year-old father who choked his young child to death when its crying drove him to a point of frenzy.

This was the lurid high point of the news account, but as a background was the story of enforced idleness, poverty, worry, despondency and finally a hopeless desperation that the wailing of a helpless infant aroused to fury.

"Sob-sisters," the "better-than-thou" element, and the like are heaping condemnation on the head of that young father—and surely his act is terrible to contemplate but the blood of his infant stains the record of a system that has taken life, destroyed homes, happiness and peace, that places a premium on everything but a worthwhile life for the average human, and upon the hands of those who uphold tat system.

HAVEN'T SEEN ANYTHING YET

A lad of Albert Lea was put in jail for drunkeness. The next morning he was in Justice Dudley's court and fined $10.50. Up to the time of going to press the boy was still in jail. A woman implored that the Tribune editor leave the lad's name out of the paper. We have complied with the request.. However, we would like to publish the name of the rascal who sold him the booze. We don't know whether the parents of this boy were advocates of the overthrow of the Prohibition Amendment or not—but we do know that there are thousands of mothers fathers who did vote for its repeal. Some of them fell for the propaganda that the repeal would eliminate bootlegging. Statistics show that the bootlegging now is nearly double that of a year ago—and still increasing. And, as we have said before, "You haven't seen anything yet!"—Albert Lea (Minn.) Tribune.

A Place to Forget

The Matson steamship company of San Francisco has installed a night club on one of its ships, in quarters formerly used as a library. Brilliant thought! A harassed capitalist, for instance might run across some literature devastating to his soul (Karl Marx, Henry George, et al.) under th old order; but now, thanks to the foresight of the steamship company, he can forget everything in a happy daze of wine, women and song.

The Broad, Broad Highway

There's a certain highway we've always wished to travel some day—the hypothetical road down which all radicals go together for a short distance—up to the crossroads. Governor Floyd B. Olson proposes traveling that road, with anyone, as long as they go in his direction. Now the Communist Party proposes a Labor Party, to be composed of members of various labor organizations who have been disillusioned by AwFuL leadership, but who do not yet subscribe entirely to the tenets of Communism; students of social justice, advanced liberals, farmers bankrupt businessmen, etc. The C. P. will travel with the new Labor party as long as it goes down the same road that the C. P. is traveling. Very nice. Now to find that highway that all these people are traveling; I'd like to go on a little excursion myself.

Storm Over Abyssinia

There isn't exactly war in Abyssinia, since no official declaration of war has ben made; but S'gn'or Mussolini, of Rome, Italy, recently sent a party of bombing planes to the African front, and is arranging for a follow-up of troops. Evidently the aim is to see how far a bunch of war eagles can go before a state of war actually exists. We expect to see in Abyssinia a counterpart of Manchuria, with Italy in the Japanese role. At any rate, a party of which Mussolini is the host is bound to be interesting, even though rough. War of conquest is indefensible, and should be denounced by any right-thinking person.

Storm Over Chaco

And in South America, Paraguayans and the Bolivians are fighting over the Chaco territory, which contains, among other things, rich oil deposits. The American munitions maker, duPont, has sold millions worth of ammunition and guns to both sides during the last few months; and several oil companies are known to be interested in the war for much profits await the final outcome. Meanwhile, the Paraguayans and the Bolivians are killing each other off with the efficient duPont instruments, while the profiteers lick their chops in greedy anticipation.

And Here, the Crowd Cheered

Guilty or not guilty? That is the question on the lips of millions of Americans who have followed the Hauptmann kidnap trial. It seems to me that whether or not Hauptmann was guilty of a kidnapping and murder, one thing should be settled beforehand, and it is this: Was the Hauptmann trial conducted by society in a spirit of vengeance, or a spirit of justice? The wolfish Wilentz displayed a killing lust characteristic of the most degraded human being, in his last plea to the jury,—and the crowd cheered. When the death sentence was given after the jury's verdict, the crowd cheered.

Here are a few questions to be asked: What human sentiment authorizes society to take the life of any person who has killed another? If it is true one must take a life for a life, doesn't this sign the death warrant for society itself? After all, what good does an "eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" accomplish? Will it stop kidnapping? Will it stop murder? Will it solve any major problem? The most significant thing to me about the Hauptmann case was—the crowd cheered.

Farmers' Union at Washington

The Carey amendment proposing to make agricultural loans to corporations on an equal basis with individual farmers failed to pass the Senate in its original form principally owing to a fight against it launched by the Northwest Farmers Union Legislative Committee working in conjunction with M. W. Thatcher.

The entire Farm Credit Act of 1935 was held up for five days during a debate in the Senate which included three days of discussion upon the Carey amendment, and this opened the way for a further amendment by Senator B. K. Wheeler of Montana providing for a reduction of interest on farm mortgage loans from 4½ percent annually to 3½ per cent annually. The Wheeler amendment consumed two days of debate.

"Additional statement of Oscar Horsford, Wolf Point, Montana."

Mr. Horsford: All that I have to state this morning, Senator, is that after going back to our committee room, and after leaving here with Senator Carey's amendment, and after discussing it, we decided that we would like to further state that we are opposed to leaving an opportunity for an opening wedge for the government to loan to corporations."

Senator Gore: "When you say 'we' whom do you refer to?"

Mr. Horsford: I am representing the Farmers Union Legislative Committee of the Northwest."

Senator Gore: "What is your name sir?"

Mr. Horsford: "Oscar Horsford. I am also interested in the activities of the co-operatives, representing about 75,000 farmers . ."

The discussion continued and we find the following quotation later in the record:

"Mr. Horsford: "If I had time I could have brought some very good facts about what corporation farming has done to us in the past. We can not compete with them. It is imposible to compete against mass production. . . ."

Prior to the Debate in Congress the Northwest Farmers Union Legislative Committee made two formal appearances in a body before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. Spokesmen for the committee in its appearances were Daniel L. O'Connor of New Rockford, North Dakota and Oscar Horsford of Wolf Point.

The defeat of the amendment as originally offered was decisive.

Evidently discouraged by the defeat of Land Bank Loans to corporations, other than those formed by livestock farmers actually living on the land, Senator B. K. Wheeler offered an amendment on Feb. 8th reducing the interest rate on farm loans from 4½ per cent to 3½ per cent annually.

This amendment caused two days additional debate in the Senate but finally passed by a vote of 39 to 43. The Wheeler amendment had the vigorous support of the Northwest Farmers Union Legislative Committee.

The Farm Credit Act of 1935 including the Wheeler amendment for the reduction of interest will go to the House of Representatives for their consideration and wil' doubtless be presented later to the President for his signature.

Appearances have recently been made by the Farmers Union group before officials of the Farm Credit Administration, Dr. Farrell of the AAA, and Secretary Wallace, in respect to speeding up seed loans

TURNOVER TAX UNRELIABLE
—o—

The revenue from a gross income tax is so uncertain as to make it most unreliable . . . Estimates at the joint meeting of the amount it would produce in this state varied from $10,000,000 to $60,00,000, based on a tax rate of one-half of one percent with $1,000 exemptions . . . The best informed tax opinion places the estimate tax opinion places the estimate between $10,000,000 and $12,000,000 . . . South Dakota, last year adopted a gross income tax and it was estimated receipts would be about $9,000,000. Collections were only $2,500,000. Other taxes had been reduced by $9,000,000 and South Dakota now finds itself in a position where its citizens face not only the usual tax load but also the interest payments on the debt occasioned by the unreliability of the gross income tax.

STEARNS-TODD-MORRISON STATE PARK A POSSIBILITY

Two members of the work division staff of the Minnesota SERA Walter F. MacGregor, state engineer, and Sven Norling, field engineer, have visited Long Prairie and vicinity to investigate the conditions bearing upon the feasibility of the proposed state park project in Todd, Stearns and Morrison counties. It would embrace some 1500 acres of land between Lake Sylvan in Stearns county and the Birch Lakes in Todd county, comprise additional areas in other townships and extend eastward to connect with the Camp Ripley reservation in Morrison county.

Survey crews will begin work at once to draw preliminary plans for the park, define its boundaries, and estimate the cost. All information gathered will be tabulated and presented to the legislature for consideration at this session.

AGRICULTURAL REQUIREMENTS
by
Gilbert Brattland

To re-establish agriculture on a safe basis, it needs a temporary abeyance of collection of all debts due from them, refinancing at a very low rate of interest, readjustment of the rates of taxation which bears heavily on them, an. a set price system on their products so as to insure them a profit basis of operation so that they can pay such debts. Farmers as a class are not willing defaulters They pay their debts as a rule. Any statement to the contrary is far from truth. If industry will not sell them processed and manufactured goods at a fair exchange then a price setting system on the goods which the farmers and workers buy is necessary.

Many object that the setting of a price is either impractical or vicious. On what goods, as a general rule, is not the price set on except that which the farmer sells. Why this discrimination? Therefore business must have found the practice sound. If sound in good business, it certainly should apply also to the farmer. If a code is good for the business interests why would it not be good for the farmer. If a code can be made by the business men for themselves then why has not the same privilege been extended to the farmer to build up a code for themselves So far only one of restricting production has been applied to them leaving them to the mercy of competition as to the sales price You can set the price on that percentage of commodities consumed in this country. You can then also allot to the farmers their percentage of such sales. This applies particularly to staple non-perishable products. Buyers of such commodities are licensed to handle only set price goods. Sales, otherwise, are not permitted on the domestic market.

Minute Sermons
By Dr. Crawford Grays

Vision has been creative of progress. Someone dreamed saw a gleam and dared to follow.

Blest indeed is he who is not disobedient to the heavenly vision

We can respond or fail to respond to the better urge. We can step on the side of the "dares" or stay with the "timids."

Some people like the sermon on the Mount so long as it stays on the Mount but if you speak of bringing it into the valley they describe it as impractical.

Brotherhood is quite a lip affair in Lodge and Service club but a minus affair in actual life; of course it comes to the front when you're dead and on the funeral day.

We have our dreams but of what avail if we are afraid? Fear makes many a "it sounds good" just meaningless platitudes.

You don't have to be bad or fanatical to destroy dreams and ideals; just be indifferent.

Dreams in our mind are of no greater worth than money left in the sock. To FOLLOW THE GLEAM is imperative, negligence is to lose the pot of gold and miss life's greatest opportunity.

Editor, Thief River Falls Forum,
Thief River Falls, Minnesota.
Dear Sir;

I will, with the editor's consent make an appeal to the readers of your paper, to lend their suppor to a plan to make the Old Mill Site a State Park. The Old Mill Site is in Town of Foldahl, Marshall county, and it is the only ground of ample size in Northern Minnesota where a big crowd can gather and find parking room or space for their cars. It is situated on Middle River 12 miles west from Newfolden, and 11 miles east and one mile north from Argyle in Marshal county and we have had picnics there in the past when there have been crowds of around 10,000 persons and the grounds can easily hold 25,000 people and parking space for the cars. The ground slopes toward the river and keeps dry when other ground would be nothing but mud; it is one of the beauty spots of Marshall county and in summer time there is hardly a nice day but there is some kind of picnic or gathering there.

The idea or plan to make the ground into a State Park was born out of the mind of Earl S. Baker of Bemidji, president of Northwestern Minnesota Historical Society, who was the principal speaker at the first annual picnic of the Marshall County Historical Society last summer, and Governor Floyd B. Olson, who was our principal speaker at our Farmer-Labor picnic last July, was sold on the idea and the Thief River Falls Times, and Thief River Falls Forum, have promised to lend their aid in putting this plan through.

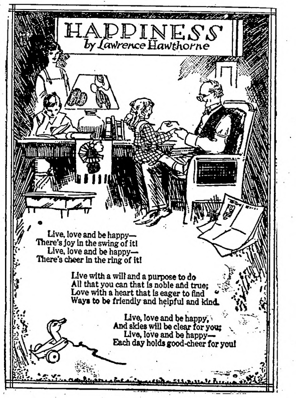
When the writer was in St. Paul January 15, 16 and 17th, he visited two nights with Senator Richard Rice, from Alvarado, who represents the 67th District in the Senate. He is keenly interested in the development of this project into a state park, and here is the plan he outlined: to have the State acquire the land and make a State Park thereof; and he further stated that he thought it would be possible to get a CCC camp there next summer provided this plan could be put over in time; the CCC boys could fix up the grounds, plant trees and flowering shrubs and flower beds; if this was done the place would be the play ground for Northwestern Minnesota, and I urge everyone to lend their aid to put this plan over. Write and urge your friends to help; get up petitions to your Senator or Representative, as they need help from home to put this through. Tell your local paper to get in or behind the plan. Phone your neighbors, talk about the plan at public meetings, and let's all help to put this matter over and coming generations will bless us. Let's go!

Very Truly yours,
—G. A. SUSTAD.

SWEDISH DEMOCRACY BIDS FAREWELL TO DEPRESSION
(Condensed from an editorial in the Christian Century)
—O—

Sweden's Parliament has opened its five hundredth session! Socialist and allied parties are in control but when the aniversary celebration got under way nobody seemed disturbed by that. In fact, all parties joined in the celebration, for King Gustav in his annual message told the country that the budget had been balanced without the imposition of higher taxes; that the unemployment problem was near solution; that no government loans were contemplated; and that the national debt would be reduced to $ 0,000,000. The sum asked for unemployment relief was only $15,000,000 as against $40,000,000 last year. And half of last year's appropriation is still unspent! At the present time the number of unemployed in Sweden is 80,000 or one percent of the country's total population.

It may be said with truth that all his was brought about without recourse to a "New Deal," or a "Brain Trust." But that is because what is a new deal to us is simply the ordinary course of events in Sweden and the Swedes have no Brain Trust because they have never taken up the American system of excluding brains from government in the first place.



Live, love and be happy—
There's joy in the swing of it!
Live, love and be happy—
There's cheer in the ring of it!

Live with a will and a purpose to do
All that you can that is noble and true;
Love with a heart that is eager to find
Ways to be friendly and helpful and kind.

Live, love and be happy,
And skies will be clear for you;
Live, love and be happy—
Each day holds good-cheer for you!

Were it not for the profit system, poverty would disappear, ignorance would disappear, crime, vice and cruelty would disappear—the prison, the poorhouse, the insane asylum and the brothel would disappear. Yes, yes, my brother, and were it not for the profit system, wars would disappear and depressions and breadlines and charity and all their hideous brood would disappear. And racial hatred and arrogance and intolerance—and man's inhumanity to man would banish forever from this blood-stained planet.—Morton Alexander.

THE TURNOVER TAX MAKES ITS DEBUT

The anticipated sales tax, or as its proponents prefer to call it, the Turnover or Gross Earnings Tax, has been introduced in the state Legislature. Inasmuch as the reactionaries are in complete control of both Houses, it is assumed that it will be passed. However, the governor has vowed that he will veto any sales tax and he can be relied upon to do just what he says he will. Nevertheless, it is well for the people to analyze the Bill that has been introduced so that they may know just what the big business element would saddle upon them.

In ballyhooing for this vicious measure, the reactionaries have wept barrels of crocodile tears for the poor overburdened real estate tax payers. Inasmuch as they have in the past been most decidedly opposed to any reform of the tax structure; and have considered the outworn and antedated tax structure with which we are burdened too sacred to be changed or modified in any way, it might be interesting to look into the why and wherefore of their change of heart.

In the past the people of Minnesota have been in the main a land-owning class. The farmers owned their own farms, and the working people of the cities owned their own homes, burdened tho they both were with mortgages. And they paid the taxes on the property; all of them regardless of how small their equity might be. The Money crowd paid only the small money and credit tax on the mortgage, and a large share of that was dodged. When there was a foreclosure the land was readily sold again for a good price and some other producer took up the tax burden. Government was controlled by Big Business, and inasmuch as Big Business did not have to foot the bill, government was a prolific spender. A study of Minnesota history discloses that more and more departments of government were created during the period ending 1928. Commissions, departments, bureaus, and interim committees. Graft, corruption and fat jobs to wardheelers and wheelhorses were the order of the day.

As the tax burden increased the home and farm-owning producing class, burdened as they were, not only with their own taxes but also with the taxes of business which was passed to them in the form of increased prices on everything that they have to buy, became restless and demanded an income tax law. Big Business fought that measure with the viciousness of a cornered rat, but it has become a law after many years of battling by the people. Big Business hopes to place a sales tax on the statute books and repeal the net income tax law.

During the past few years, the ownership of real estate has been rapidly shifting from the producing class to the money class. Of the working people in the cities, from seventy-five to ninety per cent have lost their homes and they have become tenants. During this same period, millions of farmers have lost their farms and they have become tenants, since the producers are rapidly becoming a propertyless class the money interests, in order to keep the taxes on the shoulders of the so-called lower classes resort to the sales tax to do so. Banks, insurance companies and land companies are becoming owners of vast tracts of land and long lists of city property on which they must pay the taxes under our antiquated real estate taxation system. They are combining these farm lands into corporation farms of thousands of acres in extent. Two such farms are in Kittson county. A company was organized in Moorhead only a short time ago to engage in corporation farming on a large scale. Other states have corporation farms of over one hundred thousand acres in extent. More are being formed daily. They will with power machinery and high pressure methods drive the small independent farmers out of business. PROVIDING THEY CAN GET RID OF THE REAL ESTATE TAX. In their efforts in this direction they are being aided by many independent farmers who feel the weight of the tax load but who do not realize that as small scale producers they are proportionately large consumers and will therefore have to carry the tax as consumers if not as owners of real estate if a sales tax is passed.

Now to analyze the Bill that has been introduced: According to the terms of the bill "Gross Receipts" means the aggregate sum in value passing in any transaction . . . interest ,discount, rentals, royalties, dividends fees, wages, salaries, commissions and-or other emoluments, however designated without any deductions on account of cost . . . labor . . . . or any expense whatsoever" are to be taxed at the rate of one-half of one per cent. Under its provisions the aged drawing the munificent pension of $5 per month as in Pennington county, must pay a tax on it. Under these provisions the recipient of poor relief will have to pay a tax on their allotments. Employers must deduct the tax from the wages of their employees and remit the same to the county treasurer with an affidavit each trhee months. All sales, are of course, covered under the law and the workingman who has already had the tax deducted from his pay will go to the store and pay the same taxes over again as they are passed on to the consumer, one, two or three times or more accumulations amounting to from one-half of one per cent to two and three per cent. To illustrate: a commodity has one turnover as it leaves the factory and half of one per cent is added to the cost. The jobber adds his tax; the wholesaler adds his tax and the retailer adds his tax and the consumer pays them all.

So much for the consumer. How does it affect the business man?

The grocers doing business on a small margin which seldom exceeds ten per cent will pay $50 tax on $10,000 gross business, only one thousand of which is gross profit. A clothing store, dry goods store or a jewelry store doing business on larger margins will also pay only $50 in tax on $10,000 gross business, altho their gross profit may be from $2,500 to $5,000 on the $10,000 gross turnover. And remember that from the gross profit must be paid the rent, interest, insurance and all other overhead expenses. The balance is NET profit. Inasmuch as the federal government prohibits taxing of interstate commerce the merchants who purchase from manufacturers within the state will have to pay a larger tax than those who purchase from without the state. Therefore it will discourage industry in Minnesota. For instance a chain store buying canned goods in carlots from Wisconsin will ship it to their various stores, and need add only the retail turnover. The independent merchant purchasing his canned goods from a wholesaler, who in turn buys from a jobber, who in his turn buys from a canning factory in Willmar. Red Wing, or any other Minnesota city will have to pass on to the consumer four or five turnovers, each amounting to one-half of one per cent. Needless to say the law would tend to drive all independent merchants out of existence.

Look it over, dear readers, it is S. F. No. 213 and it was introduced by Senators Cashman, Carley and Roepke. If you believe in becoming still more in the clutches of Wall Street than you are now, support it. If you don't, you had better get busy and fight it, for it is going to be passed by the Legislature unless you put up the fight of your life.

ROOSEVELT MOVED RIGHT BUT HE DIDN'T HAVE COMPANY

President Roosevelt has moved to the right and taken the left and the middle with him," wisecracks an exchange. Which might be so-ann-so as a wisecrack but is pure baloney in fact. There is no question that Roosevelt has moved to the right, if he was ever actually to the left, which we are begining to doubt very, very much. But the left is still left and more so than ever and the middle is moving left fast enough to see a few bets laid that Roosevelt will be a one-term president.

In spite of the fact that Congressman Goldborough has proven to the satisfaction of a large part of the House of Representatives that the government can if it chooses issue currency to the tune of 48 billion dollars without going off the gold standard, President Roosevelt tries to make the country believe that it would bankrupt the nation to pay the Soldier's Bonus. His latest master stroke in the art of dodging an issue by telling the ex-service men "Shush, shush boys, if you are to have the bonus, the aged can't have any pension," is about as scurvy an attempt at setting the Old Age Pension proponents at the throats of the ex-service men as ever a demagogue could devise. From now on nothing he may do or say will surprise us.

GOVERNOR OLSON; OPPORTUNIST

In our book on the Minnesota Legislature of 1933, "The Minnesota Kaleidoscope of 1933," we referred to Governor Olson as "an opportunist and strategist of the highest caliber." For that statement, or description of him we have been taken to task on one or two occasions by Farmer-Laborites who felt that it was to belittle him. It seems that to be called an opportunist is to be accused of being shallow, in the minds of some people. While we have attempted to justify the term as we used it, it has remained for the Governor himself to clarify the appelation as only he can clarify. In his speech to the Mid-West Youth Congress in the Twin Cities last week he said, "When I call myself an opportunist, I do not speak facetiously. By the term 'opportunist' I mean one who will use any agency he finds at hand, whether he believes in its entire program or not, to translate into action such part of his program as possible, however small."

NO ECONOMY IN THIS

If license fees were put back on the old (reduced) level, Clay county car owners would save about $2,700 a year and lose many times that amount in money which would otherwise go into roads * * * The bulk of the auto license fee money is collected in the large cities and is distributed out over the whole state.

THE NEW DEAL
(St .Paul Union Advocate)

All during the presidential campaign Mr. Roosevelt went before the American public to preach what he termed as a new philosophy of government. He spoke at great length of the "forgotten man," and promised a new deal to the toiling masses.

But this much ballyhooed "new deal" has not materialized. The NRA with its splendid guarantees to Labor has become a mere memory, and now Mr. Roosevelt has given his official sanction to a proposal to pay workers on governmental projects an average of $50 per month.

It should not be necessary to repeat the warnings of Labor on such matters, but it may be to the point to stress them again. Labor has insisted right along that whatever action the federal government takes in the matter of setting a wage scale—that scale will become the yardstick of private industry. This was true of other policies such as the Farley program of retrenchment, the laying off of thousands of government workers, the denial of vacations on full pay, the payless furloughs, the hold-backs and stretch-outs. Private industry has taken its inspiration from such policies to further depress Labor. If the government adopts a wage scale under which workers on federal jobs are to be paid $50 a month, private industry will follow suit to the utter corruption of American standards of living.

The "new deal" sounded good from the speakers' rostrum, but in its practical application it has a bad odor, an odor that suggests Hoover, Coolidge and Harding—each of whom in his time thought that the way back to prosperity was through rugged individualism, patronage and aid for the wealthy—and dry bread for the masses.

(Forest Lake Times)

Last week the newspapers throughout the country carried a short account of a 17-year-old father who choked his young child to death when its crying drove him to a point of frenzy.

This was the lurid high point of the news account, but as a background was the story of enforced idleness, poverty, worry, despondency and finally a hopeless desperation that the wailing of a helpless infant aroused to fury.

"Sob-sisters," the "better-than-thou" element, and the like are heaping condemnation on the head of that young father—and surely his act is terrible to contemplate but the blood of his infant stains the record of a system that has taken life, destroyed homes, happiness and peace, that places a premium on everything but a worthwhile life for the average human, and upon the hands of those who uphold tat system.

HAVEN'T SEEN ANYTHING YET

A lad of Albert Lea was put in jail for drunkeness. The next morning he was in Justice Dudley's court and fined $10.50. Up to the time of going to press the boy was still in jail. A woman implored that the Tribune editor leave the lad's name out of the paper. We have complied with the request. However, we would like to publish the name of the rascal who sold him the booze. We don't know whether the parents of this boy were advocates of the overthrow of the Prohibition Amendment or not—but we do know that there are thousands of mothers fathers who did vote for its repeal. Some of them fell for the propaganda that the repeal would eliminate bootlegging. Statistics show that the bootlegging now is nearly double that of a year ago—and still increasing. And, as we have said before, "You haven't seen anything yet!"—Albert Lea (Minn.) Tribune.

A Place to Forget

The Matson steamship company of San Francisco has installed a night club on one of its ships, in quarters formerly used as a library. Brilliant thought! A harassed capitalist, for instance might run across some literature devastating to his soul (Karl Marx, Henry George, et al.) under th old order; but now, thanks to the foresight of the steamship company, he can forget everything in a happy daze of wine, women and song.

The Broad, Broad Highway

There's a certain highway we've always wished to travel some day —the hypothetical road down which all radicals go together for a short distance—up to the crossroads. Governor Floyd B. Olson proposes traveling that road, with anyone, as long as they go in his direction. Now the Communist Party proposes a Labor Party, to be composed of members of various labor organizations who have been disillusioned by AwFuL leadership, but who do not yet subscribe entirely to the tenets of Communism; students of social justice, advanced liberals, farmers bankrupt businessmen, etc. The C. P. will travel with the new Labor party as long as it goes down the same road that the C. P. is traveling. Very nice. Now to find that highway that all these people are traveling; I'd like to go on a little excursion myself.

Storm Over Abyssinia

There isn't exactly war in Abyssinia, since no official declaration of war has ben made; but Signior Mussolini, of Rome, Italy, recently sent a party of bombing planes to the African front, and is arranging for a follow-up of troops. Evidently the aim is to see how far a bunch of war eagles can go before a state of war actually exists. We expect to see in Abyssinia a counterpart of Manchuria, with Italy in the Japanese role. At any rate, a party of which Mussolini is the host is bound to be interesting, even though rough. War of conquest is indefensible, and should be denounced by any right-thinking person.

And in South America, Paraguayans and the Bolivians are fighting over the Chaco territory, which contains, among other things, rich oil deposits. The American munitions maker, duPont, has sold millions worth of ammunition and guns to both sides during the last few months; and several oil companies are known to be interested in the war for much profits await the final outcome. Meanwhile, the Paraguayans and the Bolivians are killing each other off with the efficient duPont instruments, while the profiteers lick their chops in greedy anticipation.

And Here, the Crowd Cheered

Guilty or not guilty? That is the question on the lips of millions of Americans who have followed the Hauptmann kidnap trial. It seems to me that whether or not Hauptmann was guilty of a kidnapping and murder, one thing should be settled beforehand, and it is this: Was the Hauptmann trial conducted by society in a spirit of vengeance, or a spirit of justice? The wolfish Wilentz displayed a killing lust characteristic of the most degraded human being, in his last plea to the jury,—and the crowd cheered. When the death sentence was given after the jury's verdict, the crowd cheered.

Here are a few questions to be asked: What human sentiment authorizes society to take the life of any person who has killed another? If it is true one must take a life for a life, doesn't this sign the death warrant for society itself? After all, what good does an "eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" accomplish? Will it stop kidnapping? Will it stop murder? Will it solve any major problem? The most significant thing to me about the Hauptmann case was—the crowd cheered.

Farmers' Union at Washington

The Carey amendment proposing to make agricultural loans to corporations on an equal basis with individual farmers failed to pass the Senate in its original form principally owing to a fight against it launched by the Northwest Farmers Union Legislative Committee working in conjunction with M. W. Thatcher.

The entire Farm Credit Act of 1935 was held up for five days during a debate in the Senate which included three days of discussion upon the Carey amendment, and this opened the way for a further amendment by Senator B. K. Wheeler of Montana providing for a reduction of interest on farm mortgage loans from 4½ percent annually to 3½ per cent annually. The Wheeler amendment consumed two days of debate.

"Additional statement of Oscar Horsford, Wolf Point, Montana."

Mr. Horsford: All that I have to state this morning, Senator, is that after going back to our committee room, and after leaving here with Senator Carey's amendment, and after discussing it, we decided that we would like to further state that we are opposed to leaving an opportunity for an opening wedge for the government to loan to corporations."

Senator Gore: "When you say 'we' whom do you refer to?"

Mr. Horsford: I am representing the Farmers Union Legislative Committee of the Northwest."

Senator Gore: "What is your name sir?"

Mr. Horsford: "Oscar Horsford. I am also interested in the activities of the co-operatives, representing about 75,000 farmers . . "

The discussion continued and we find the following quotation later in the record:

"Mr. Horsford: "If I had time I could have brought some very good facts about what corporation farming has done to us in the past. We can not compete with them. It is imposible to compete against mass production. . ."

Prior to the Debate in Congress the Northwest Farmers Union Legislative Committee made two formal appearances in a body before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. Spokesmen for the committee in its appearances were Daniel L. O'Connor of New Rockford, North Dakota and Oscar Horsford of Wolf Point.

The defeat of the amendment as originally offered was decisive.

Evidently discouraged by the defeat of Land Bank Loans to corporations, other than those formed by livestock farmers actually living on the land, Senator B. K. Wheeler offered an amendment on Feb. 8th reducing the interest rate on farm loans from 4½ per cent to 3½ per cent annually.

This amendment caused two days additional debate in the Senate but finally passed by a vote of 39 to 43. The Wheeler amendment had the vigorous support of the Northwest Farmers Union Legislative Committee.

The Farm Credit Act of 1935 including the Wheeler amendment for the reduction of interest will go to the House of Representatives for their consideration and will doubtless be presented later to the President for his signature.

Appearances have recently been made by the Farmers Union group before officials of the Farm Credit Administration, Dr. Farrell of the AAA, and Secretary Wallace, in respect to speeding up seed loans

TURNOVER TAX UNRELIABLE
—O—

The revenue from a gross income tax is so uncertain as to make it most unreliable . . . Estimates at the joint meeting of the amount it would produce in this state varied from $10,000,000 to $60,00,000, based on a tax rate of one-half of one percent with $1,000 exemptions . . . The best informed tax opinion places the estimate tax opinion places the estimate between $10,000,000 and $12,000,000 . . . South Dakota, last year adopted a gross income tax and it was estimated receipts would be about $9,000,000. Collections were only $2,500,000. Other taxes had been reduced by $9,000,000 and South Dakota now finds itself in a position where its citizens face not only the usual tax load but also the interest payments on the debt occasioned by the unreliability of the gross income tax.

STEARNS-TODD-MORRISON STATE PARK A POSSIBILITY

Two members of the work division staff of the Minnesota SERA Walter F. MacGregor, state engineer, and Sven Norling, field engineer, have visited Long Prairie and vicinity to investigate the conditions bearing upon the feasibility of the proposed state park project in Todd, Stearns and Morrison counties. It would embrace some 1500 acres of land between Lake Sylvan in Stearns county and the Birch Lakes in Todd county, comprise additional areas in other townships and extend eastward to connect with the Camp Ripley reservation in Morrison county.

Survey crews will begin work at once to draw preliminary plans for the park, define its boundaries, and estimate the cost. All information gathered will be tabulated and presented to the legislature for consideration at this session.

AGRICULTURAL REQUIREMENTS
by
Gilbert Brattland

To re-establish agriculture on a safe basis, it needs a temporary abeyance of collection of all debts due from them, refinancing at a very low rate of interest, readjustment of the rates of taxation which bears heavily on them, and a set price system on their products so as to insure them a profit basis of operation so that they can pay such debts. Farmers as a class are not willing defaulters They pay their debts as a rule. Any statement to the contrary is far from truth. If industry will not sell them processed and manufactured goods at a fair exchange then a price setting system on the goods which the farmers and workers buy is necessary.

Many object that the setting of a price is either impractical or vicious. On what goods, as a general rule, is not the price set on except that which the farmer sells. Why this discrimination? Therefore business must have found the practice sound. If sound in good business, it certainly should apply also to the farmer. If a code is good for the business interests why would it not be good for the farmer. If a code can be made by the business men for themselves then why has not the same privilege been extended to the farmer to build up a code for themselves So far only one of restricting production has been applied to them leaving them to the mercy of competition as to the sales price You can set the price on that percentage of commodities consumed in this country. You can then also allot to the farmers their percentage of such sales. This applies particularly to staple non-perishable products. Buyers of such commodities are licensed to handle only set price goods. Sales, otherwise, are not permitted on the domestic market.

The Old Mill Site is in Town of Foldahl, Marshall county, and it is the only ground of ample size in Northern Minnesota where a big crowd can gather and find parking room or space for their cars. It is situated on Middle River 12 miles west from Newfolden, and 11 miles east and one mile north from Argyle in Marshal county and we have had picnics there in the past when there have been crowds of around 10,000 persons and the grounds can easily hold 25,000 people and parking space for the cars. The ground slopes toward the river and keeps dry when other ground would be nothing but mud; it is one of the beauty spots of Marshall county and in summer time there is hardly a nice day but there is some kind of picnic or gathering there.

The idea or plan to make the ground into a State Park was born out of the mind of Earl S. Baker of Bemidji, president of Northwestern Minnesota Historical Society, who was the principal speaker at the first annual picnic of the Marshall County Historical Society last summer, and Governor Floyd B. Olson, who was our principal speaker at our Farmer-Labor picnic last July, was sold on the idea and the Thief River Falls Times, and Thief River Falls Forum, have promised to lend their aid in putting this plan through.

When the writer was in St. Paul January 15, 16 and 17th, he visited two nights with Senator Richard Rice, from Alvarado, who represents the 67th District in the Senate. He is keenly interested in the development of this project into a state park, and here is the plan he outlined: to have the State acquire the land and make a State Park thereof; and he further stated that he thought it would be possible to get a CCC camp there next summer provided this plan could be put over in time; the CCC boys could fix up the grounds, plant trees and flowering shrubs and flower beds; if this was done the place would be the play ground for Northwestern Minnesota, and I urge everyone to lend their aid to put this plan over. Write and urge your friends to help; get up petitions to your Senator or Representative, as they need help from home to put this through. Tell your local paper to get in or behind the plan. Phone your neighbors, talk about the plan at public meetings, and let's all help to put this matter over and coming generations will bless us. Let's go!

Very Truly yours,
—G. A. SUSTAD.

Minute Sermons
By Dr. Crawford Grays

Vision has been creative of progress. Someone dreamed saw a gleam and dared to follow.

Blest indeed is he who is not disobedient to the heavenly vision

We can respond or fail to respond to the better urge. We can step on the side of the "dares" or stay with the "timids."

Some people like the sermon on the Mount so long as it stays on the Mount but if you speak of bringing it into the valley they describe it as impractical.

Brotherhood is quite a lip affair in Lodge and Service club but a minus affair in actual life; of course it comes to the front when you're dead and on the funeral day.

We have our dreams but of what avail if we are afraid? Fear makes many a "it sounds good" just meaningless platitudes.

You don't have to be bad or fanatical to destroy dreams and ideals; just be indifferent.

Dreams in our mind are of no greater worth than money left in the sock. To FOLLOW THE GLEAM is imperative, negligence is to lose the pot of gold and miss life's greatest opportunity.

SWEDISH DEMOCRACY BIDS FAREWELL TO DEPRESSION
(Condensed from an editorial in the Christian Century)
—O—

Sweden's Parliament has opened its five hundredth session! Socialist and allied parties are in control but when the aniversary celebration got under way nobody seemed disturbed by that. In fact, all parties joined in the celebration, for King Gustav in his annual message told the country that the budget had been balanced without the imposition of higher taxes; that the unemployment problem was near solution; that no government loans were contemplated; and that the national debt would be reduced to $[illegible]. The sum asked for unemployment relief was only $15,000,000 as against $40,000,000 last year. And half of last year's appropriation is still unspent! At the present time the number of unemployed in Sweden is 80,000 or one percent of the country's total population.

It may be said with truth that all his was brought about without recourse to a "New Deal," or a "Brain Trust." But that is because what is a new deal to us is simply the ordinary course of events in Sweden and the Swedes have no Brain Trust because they have never taken up the American system of excluding brains from government in the first place.

Live, love and be happy—
There's joy in the swing of it!
Live, love and be happy—
There's cheer in the ring of it!

Live with a will and a purpose to do
All that you can that is noble and true;
Love with a heart that is eager to find
Ways to be friendly and helpful and kind.

Live, love and be happy,
And skies will be clear for you;
Live, love and be happy—
Each day holds good-cheer for you!

LACK OF FUNDS COMPLICATES RELIEF PROBLEM

Unless funds are forthcoming by the middle of February, the Minnesota ERA will be compelled to stop work on all relief projects and resort to cash doles as long as the money lasts, declares L. P. Zimmerman, acting administrator.

Because of congressional delay in passing the President's work relief bill, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration could only make an allotment in part to Minnesota for the Month of February. This partial grant amounted to $1,688,000 or just one-third of the sum needed for the entire month.

The case load, or number of families and single residents on direct and work relief, rose to 109,000 during January, and may reach 114,000 by the end of February.

LOVE APPLE

The Tomato's Past

ORIGINALLY known in Europe as the Love Apple, used as a decorative garden plant and considered unfit for human consumption—the tomato today is one of the most valuable and popular of all foods It is one of the most largely produced of all canned foods, and has won its tremendous popularity not only by its flavor but by the nutritive properties which the medical profession has discovered it to possess.

Tomatoes are rich in vegetable acids and contribute to the diet significant amounts of desirable mineral elements. They combine the properties of fruits and green vegetables. They are one of the very best sources of Vitamin C, and a good source of Vitamins A, B and G. Canned tomatoes are now said to be an even better source of Vitamin C than raw tomatoes bought in the market and cooked in the usual way at home.

A Grand Combination

And, speaking of ways of cooking tomatoes, here's a grand combination of tomatoes and another well-known health food, known as Cabbage and Tomato au Gratin. The ingredients are:

3 cups cooked cabbage
1 No. 2 can tomatoes
1 1/3 cups grated cheese
Salt—pepper
1/3 cup dry crumbs
2 tablespoons butter

Put alternate layers of cabbage, tomatoes, cheese and sprinklings of salt and pepper in a baking dish, repeating until all the ingredients are used up. Top with crumbs, dot with butter, and bake for about twenty minutes in a moderately hot oven. This recipe will serve six people, and should cost incidentally, less than thirty-five cents.*

JANUARY GAME LAW ARRESTS TOTAL 85

State game wardens during the month of January arrested 85 persons becouse of violations of game laws, according to Erling Swenson, director of the Division of Game and Fish. Fines in the amount of $1,576.85 were assessed.

"Arrests during the month past showed an increase over January. 1934, "notwithstanding the fact that there has been a reduction in the warden force as compared with last year," Mr. Swenson pointed out.

Game and fish officials expressed regret at lack of cooperation on the part of many of the local peace officers, municipal judges and justices of the peace where apparent flagrant law violations are found by game wardens. A recent case at Pequot of an alien hunting with a resident license brought an acquittal by a jury of six men.

Turnover Tax Is Discriminatory

The turnover tax is dicriminatory against the local independent merchant and other forms of business . . . The Federal government prohibits taxing of interstate commerce . . . A large share of the business of chain stores and national corporations is interstate. Chain stores, operating their own mills, bakeries, and wholesale agencies could easily keep prices lower than independent competitors because there would be no turnover between the raw material stage and the retail stage on which to pay taxes . . . Out-of-state concerns could ship goods to Minnesota on consignment and Minnesota could not tax these goods . . . Shippers of wheat to eastern terminals, packers, and the mining companies would have their present property tax removed and avoid payment of the gross income tax . . . The benefits of the tax would largely accrue to absentee landlords. . . .

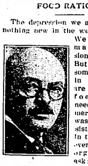
Let Our Motto Be
GOOD HEALTH
BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD
Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

A NEW ATTITUDE TOWARD FOOD RATIONS



The depression we are now in is nothing new in the world's history. We have had many depressions before But there is something new in the way we are apportioning food to the needy. In former times it was a bare subsistence ration. In this age, however, most relief organizations ask: What must a family be given to maintain health? The maintenance of health and the maintenance of a bare subsistence ration are two entirely different things.

Particularly are health officials concerned with the maintenance of health among growing children. The children of today are the rulers of tomorrow.

For the past twenty years the United States has had the healthiest young people in the world. This is because we did not have to make the dietetic sacrifices the leading European countries did during the war and post-war periods.

Our young people had food enough and the right kind of food. It is up to us now to see that the standards of nutrition are not lowered to the danger point.

Especially should relief organizations remember that milk is the most important food a child can have, for "milk builds bone and muscle better than any other food." One quart a day per child is the ideal ration, and never less than three-fourths quart per child.

If the expenditure is fairly ample, then, according to Dr. Henry Sherman, nutrition expert of Columbia university, who quotes Lucy H. Gillett of the American Child Health association, the food money should be divided into fifths:

One-fifth or more, for milk and cheese.

One-fifth, more or less, for vegetables and fruits.

One-fifth, or more, for bread and cereals.

One-fifth, or less, for meats, fish and eggs.

One-fifth, or less, for fats, sugar and other groceries.

But if the amount of food money has to be drastically curtailed, then the money should be divided into thirds

One-third for milk and cheese.

One-third for vegetables and fruits.

One-third for bread and cereals.

"Let retrenchment of expenditures," says Doctor Sherman, "take the form, first, of foregoing the purchase of foods of other groups, and, next, of selecting the cheaper or cheapest forms or articles within each of three groups just mentioned as essential."

Let us hope that each community has some philanthropist who will donate, through the winter months, a teaspoon of cod liver oil to each needy child under two years of age, as a preventive against rickets.

A point that is not sufficiently stressed, I believe, in low cost rations, is that cheap foods can be made palatable and interesting. At home demonstration fairs, instead of prizes being given to fancy dishes, they should be given to the cook who can produce the best bean or pea or potato soup, using only cheap materials. For instance a bit of bay leaf and rutabaga added to pea soup gives it distinction. Onions are cheap and give good seasoning. A writer commentator, discussing present living conditions in Europe, stated that the Germans lived better on the same food expenditure than the English did, because the German women made their food taste good.

A food that should be used much more frequently is whole wheat grains. Whole wheat offers one of our cheapest, best balanced foods.

Slow boiling over a low fire for six hours will cook wheat grains. The cooked cereal contains starch, which is fuel; protein, a tissue builder; some fats and vitamins. The fats and vitamins are in the germ of the grain. Wheat swells to four times its volume after boiling. When you boil the wheat, add to it eight times as much water, and never pour off excess liquid; boil it into the grains. Add salt, of course. Wheat cooked this way has a nutty flavor; it is most tasty of all the cereals.

One pound of wheat grains contains 1,600 calories. Each cup of cooked wheat contains 200 calories or body energy producing units, in addition to a well-balanced starch, protein, salt and vitamin content. Whole milk, cream, or condensed milk and sugar can be added for goodness and to increase the food value.

A person could live on whole wheat and milk for a long time, with the addition of onions, potatoes and tomatoes to combat scurvy. Children would need cod liver oil to prevent rickets.

Beltrami Island Exodus Is Set for Early Spring

The city of Baudette is headquarters for the movement of 300 farmers from isolated sections of the Beltrami Island forest district in Roseau and Lake of the Woods counties, to more suitable lands selected for them by the AAA in conjunction with the Minnesota SERA.

A. D. Wilson, formerly of Guthrie, will have charge of the government purchase of the farms to be vacated while J. W. Taylor, formerly of Roseau, will attend to the buying of new homesites for the families. The sums paid for the farms relinquished, will be applied on the purchase price for the new locations.

Actual moving will start early in the spring. It is estimated that it will require three years for the settlers to clear from 40 to 50 acres on their new places. The federal government will grant long- time loans to finance all improvement operations.

Coffee Rules

YOU'VE read them, dozens of them—lists of rules for making good coffee. But none of the lists is any good if the coffee isn't good which means, among other things, fresh. To make a good cup of coffee out of coffee that isn't fresh to start with is as hopeless a task as the traditional effort to "make a silk purse out of a sow's ear." It just can't be done.

But if you start right, with good fresh coffee, and apply a good set of rules, the results are fine. There's an infallible way to get good fresh coffee, too. Select any brand you want so long as it's a brand that retails its coffee in vacuum packed cans. If you don't use one of those, switch to one of them because vacuum packed coffee is the only coffee that comes to you always strictly fresh. It can't get stale on a grocer's shelf or your own if it's packed that way, because it absolutely excludes oxygen which is what makes coffee get stale.

All the Same

As for the rules for making the brew after you have made sure of good fresh coffee, they are all approximately the same. The next step is measuring the amounts of coffee and water carefully with an accurate measuring cup and spoon. You should use two level measuring tablespoons of coffee to each level measuring cup of water. This is the rule no matter what type of coffee-making device you use. Never let coffee boil because that ruins the flavor, and never let it stand more than half an hour if you want the flavor to be perfect.*

Grilled Country Ham
Yum Yum Muffins Coffee

Yum Yum Muffins: Break stale bread into enough small pieces to fill two cups; soak for ten minutes in one and one-fourth cups of hot diluted evaporated milk. Add two well-beaten eggs. Add the following sifted dry ingredients: one cup flour, two and one-half teaspoons baking powder, one-fourth teaspoon salt and four tablespoons sugar. Then add two tablespoons of melted butter. Pour into well-greased muffin tins and drop a bit of firm jelly in the center of each. Bake in a hot oven—400 degrees—for about twenty-five minutes. This makes twelve muffins. If you prefer these muffins plain, just omit the jelly, and serve them hot with honey or preserves.

And remember that breakfast coffee is perhaps the most important coffee of the day. See that it is vacuum packed so that it has that fresh roasted smell and full flavor when you take it from the can.*

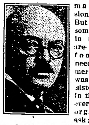
Let Our Motto Be
GOOD HEALTH
BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD
Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

A NEW ATTITUDE TOWARD FOOD RATIONS



The depression we are now in is nothing new in the world's history. We have had many depressions before But there is something new in the way we are apportioning food to the needy. In former times it was a bare subsistence ration. In this age, however, most relief organizations ask: What must a family be given to maintain health? The maintenance of health and the maintenance of a bare subsistence ration are two entirely different things.

Particularly are health officials concerned with the maintenance of health among growing children. The children of today are the rulers of tomorrow.

For the past twenty years the United States has had the healthiest young people in the world. This is because we did not have to make the dietetic sacrifices the leading European countries did during the war and post-war periods.

Our young people had food enough and the right kind of food. It is up to us now to see that the standards of nutrition are not lowered to the danger point.

Especially should relief organizations remember that milk is the most important food a child can have, for "milk builds bone and muscle better than any other food." One quart a day per child is the ideal ration, and never less than three-fourths quart per child.

If the expenditure is fairly ample, then, according to Dr. Henry Sherman, nutrition expert of Columbia university, who quotes Lucy H. Gillett of the American Child Health association, the food money should be divided into fifths:

One-fifth or more, for milk and cheese.

One-fifth, more or less, for vegetables and fruits.

One-fifth, or more, for bread and cereals.

One-fifth, or less, for meats, fish and eggs.

One-fifth, or less, for fats, sugar, and other groceries.

But if the amount of food money has to be drastically curtailed, then the money should be divided into thirds

One-third for milk and cheese.

One-third for vegetables and fruits.

One-third for bread and cereals.

"Let retrenchment of expenditures," says Doctor Sherman, "take the form, first, of foregoing the purchase of foods of other groups, and, next, of selecting the cheaper or cheapest forms or articles within each of three groups just mentioned as essential."

Let us hope that each community has some philanthropist who will donate, through the winter months, a teaspoon of cod liver oil to each needy child under two years of age, as a preventive against rickets.

A point that is not sufficiently stressed, I believe, in low cost rations, is that cheap foods can be made palatable and interesting. At home demonstration fairs, instead of prizes being given to fancy dishes, they should be given to the cook who can produce the best bean or pea or potato soup, using only cheap materials. For instance a bit of bay leaf and rutabaga added to pea soup gives it distinction. Onions are cheap and give good seasoning. A writer commentator, discussing present living conditions in Europe, stated that the Germans lived better on the same food expenditure than the English did, because the German women made their food taste good.

A food that should be used much more frequently is whole wheat grains. Whole wheat offers one of our cheapest, best balanced foods.

Slow boiling over a low fire for six hours will cook wheat grains. The cooked cereal contains starch, which is fuel; protein, a tissue builder; some fats and vitamins. The fats and vitamins are in the germ of the grain. Wheat swells to four times its volume after boiling. When you boil the wheat, add to it eight times as much water, and never pour off excess liquid; boil it into the grains. Add salt, of course. Wheat cooked this way has a nutty flavor; it is most tasty of all the cereals.

One pound of wheat grains contains 1,600 calories. Each cup of cooked wheat contains 200 calories or body energy producing units, in addition to a well-balanced starch, protein, salt and vitamin content. Whole milk, cream, or condensed milk and sugar can be added for goodness and to increase the food value.

A person could live on whole wheat and milk for a long time, with the addition of onions, potatoes and tomatoes to combat scurvy. Children would need cod liver oil to prevent rickets.

Beltrami Island Exodus Is Set for Early Spring

The city of Baudette is headquarters for the movement of 300 farmers from isolated sections of the Beltrami Island forest district in Roseau and Lake of the Woods counties, to more suitable lands selected for them by the AAA in conjunction with the Minnesota SERA.

A. D. Wilson, formerly of Guthrie, will have charge of the government purchase of the farms to be vacated while J. W. Taylor, formerly of Roseau, will attend to the buying of new homesites for the families. The sums paid for the farms relinquished, will be applied on the purchase price for the new locations.

Actual moving will start early in the spring. It is estimated that it will require three years for the settlers to clear from 40 to 50 acres on their new places. The federal government will grant long-time loans to finance all improvement operations.

Coffee Rules

YOU'VE read them, dozens of them—lists of rules for making good coffee. But none of the lists is any good if the coffee isn't good which means, among other things, fresh. To make a good cup of coffee out of coffee that isn't fresh to start with is as hopeless a task as the traditional effort to "make a silk purse out of a sow's ear." It just can't be done.

But if you start right, with good fresh coffee, and apply a good set of rules, the results are fine. There's an infallible way to get good fresh coffee, too. Select any brand you want so long as it's a brand that retails its coffee in vacuum packed cans. If you don't use one of those, switch to one of them because vacuum packed coffee is the only coffee that comes to you always strictly fresh. It can't get stale on a grocer's shelf or your own if it's packed that way, because it absolutely excludes oxygen which is what makes coffee get stale.

All the Same

As for the rules for making the brew after you have made sure of good fresh coffee, they are all approximately the same. The next step is measuring the amounts of coffee and water carefully with an accurate measuring cup and spoon. You should use two level measuring tablespoons of coffee to each level measuring cup of water. This is the rule no matter what type of coffee-making device you use. Never let coffee boil because that ruins the flavor, and never let it stand more than half an hour if you want the flavor to be perfect.*

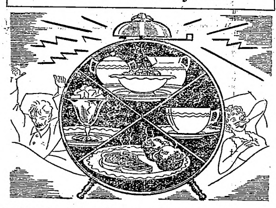
Better Breakfasts



DING-a-ling-a-ling-g-g-g! You've guessed it. It's the alarm clock with its tiresome habit of morning performance. You can look it square in the face, rest and stretch and yawn for ten minutes or so longer, if you've made out your breakfast menu the day before. Plan something that is quick to prepare, but very delicious.

Here is a menu that will give you that good-to-be-alive feeling:

Watermelon Cubes
Cereal with Cream
Grilled Country Ham
Yum Yum Muffins Coffee

Yum Yum Muffins: Break stale bread into enough small pieces to fill two cups; soak for ten minutes in one and one-fourth cups of hot diluted evaporated milk. Add two well-beaten eggs. Add the following sifted dry ingredients: one cup flour, two and one-half teaspoons baking powder, one-fourth teaspoon salt and four tablespoons sugar. Then add two tablespoons of melted butter. Pour into well-greased muffin tins and drop a bit of firm jelly in the center of each. Bake in a hot oven—400 degrees—for about twenty-five minutes. This makes twelve muffins. If you prefer these muffins plain, just omit the jelly, and serve them hot with honey or preserves.

And remember that breakfast coffee is perhaps the most important coffee of the day. See that it is vacuum packed so that it has that fresh roasted smell and full flavor when you take it from the can.*

MAYBE IT WAS SOME OTHER GOVERNOR OR EXAM OR SOMETHING

R. W. Hitchcock, the Republican press agent and radio master of ceremonies, has tapped his bell again. In a recent broadcast Mr. Hitchcock professed to smell something he recognized as politics (he should know) in an alleged state board examination which contained a few sentences describing the inauguration of Governor Floyd B. Olson. Students were expected to analyze the sentences and give the grammatical construction of the words therein—according to Mr. Hitchcock.

Well, there is nothing so criminally political about it. even if true. Comes now an official statement from John G. Rockwell, commissioner of education, who deposes and saith that no such examination has been given since the governor was inaugurated The only exam given in January was in mathematics, and the governor was not in that. A few tryout exams were given in December the records show, but there was no reference to anybody named Olson in them, either.

Call your shots, Mr. Hitchcock call your shots.

LOW WATER LEVELS THREATEN FISH LIFE

Transfer of game fishes to lakes with deeper water and removal of rough fish for sale has been made necesary because of low lake levels with the danger of fish life being smothered out, George Weaver of the Division of Game and Fish, reported. This work during the month of January was confined to lakes in the southern and southwestern parts of the state.

During the past month a total of 218,257 game fishes were rescued by state fishing crews from shallow lakes and transferred to deep water lakes [illegible]. Mr. Weaver said. Crappies headed the list with 139,394. Perch were second with 63,596. Other species included pickerel, sunfish, bullheads, silver and black bass, and wall-eyed pike.

Considerable loss of fish life occurred at Lake Sakatah in Le Sueur county and Lake Wilmert in Martin county because of delay in securing local support of the work. "The degree of efficiency in fish rescue work depends directly on the cooperation received from local communities where shallow lakes are reported," Mr Weaver said.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Ben Elliott—from "Yonder"—signalizes his entry into the lumbering town of Tincup by defeating Bull Duval, "king of the river," and town bully, in a log-birling contest. Elliott has brought along an old man, Don Stuart, who had been eager to reach Tincup, but Nicholas Brandon, the town's leading citizen, resents Stuart's presence. He tries to force him to leave town and Elliott, resenting the act, knocks him down. Elliott is arrested.

CHAPTER II.—Elliott finds a friend in Judge Able Armitage, to whom he confides that he has come to town because he'd heard it was a tough nut to crack. The judge hires him to run the one lumber camp, the Hoot Owl, that Brandon has not been able to grab. This belongs to Dawn McManus, daughter of Brandon's old partner, who has disappeared with a murder charge hanging over his head.

"I had. Tincup has a reputation all through the Lake states. I'd heard so many times that a good man with ideas of his own, with independence and, maybe, with ambition had better keep away from here that I found myself hankering to get a look at the place."

"What's your line of work?"

"I follow the timber. . . . Anything."

"Well, just what, for instance? What are some of the jobs you've held?"

Elliott smiled a bit.

"Good many. I was a chore boy once; another time I was a road monkey. I've teamed and sawed, worked as millwright and on rivers. Once or twice I've run a camp or two."

"But your avocation, I take it, is looking for hard nuts?"

Brandon spoke now:

"Your honor!" His voice was well modulated and yet in its quality was something which suggested iron covered with velvet. "As complaining witness in this case, may I suggest that we are beginning to waste time? This young man has pleaded guilty. Of course, I do not want to be put in the light of one who attempts to dictate to a court of law, but I have pressing matters to attend to and if we can get on. . . ."

Outwardly this was only a suggestion, a plea; really, though, it was one way of demanding, of giving an order.

"Yes, you're a busy man, Nick," Able said and nodded. "I'd sort of figured being busy here today, myself. Sort of wondered if somebody wouldn't bring in Bull Duval on a charge of assault and battery. He trimmed my man Harrington so badly that he's gone and my operation's without a boss today. I sort of thought, being interested as you are in law and order, that Duval might be brought in."

"That is something I know nothing about," Brandon said severely.

"Likely not. You can't be expected to keep as close track of the men who work for you as I do of mine. That is, it isn't reasonable to think a man of your caliber would."

He spoke drily and Elliott, watching the two, could see that his words stung Brandon. The justice straightened in his chair, however.

"But maybe we are delaying things. Now, Mr. Elliott, don't you think it a little out of the way to come into a town, a total stranger, and upset all that town's precedents? If you, instead of one of Mr. Brandon's hired men, had cleaned up on my man Harrington, for instance, it might not have been such a grave offense. But here you come and pick out the one man in Tincup who hasn't been struck or even threatened in longer than I can recall—a man who is regarded here about like most folks would regard a baron of the Middle ages—and toss him out into the mud! Why, Elliott, that's not ever happened before!

"Probably it didn't hurt Nick much, but there are his feelings to consider. Aren't you ashamed of giving people a chance to jeer at Mr. Brandon?"

"It wasn't a very smart thing to do," Elliott admitted. "It's not likely now, that I'll even get a chance to see how hard a nut this town really is."

"And no worse than you deserve!" Able said sharply. "You know better than to carry on that way, Elliott. I've got to give you a fine commensurate with your offense. I'll fine you a dollar and seventy-five cents for costs or send you to jail for a day."

In the rear a sacrilegious titter or two. From the sheriff, a grunt; from Nicholas Brandon a breath of offended dignity and a look that scorched. But on Ben Elliott's face only appeared a foolish smile.

"That's reasonable enough," he said, "but the joker is this: I haven't even got the dollar!"

"Well, our jail's real comfortable, I'm told. A day there'll let you think over the advisability of going around the country muddying up the pants of respectable citizens!"

Elliott, though, faced even so short a jail sentence with anything but relish.

"I can get the money easy enough,' he said. "That is if you, your honor, or somebody else'll send a wire for me."

"That might be arranged. Where to?"

"Here—" He reached for a sheet of paper and pencil lying on the table. Swiftly he wrote the words: "Badger Forest Products company, Beech Ridge, Wisconsin." He handed it to Able. "Will you wire for twenty-five dollars and sign my name? Send the message collect."

"That's a big outfit," the judge said. "You figure they'll do as you ask?"

"Well, they never have turned me down for anything I've asked. Of course, there's always the first time. If you'll do that . . .

"Until that gets back, Sheriff, I suppose it's me for the brig. . . . Is that right, Judge?"

Able was studying the address and when he looked up and grunted an affirmative reply his gaze was far away. Far, far away.

For a considerable interval after his court room had emptied, Able Armitage sat motionless in his chair. His eye still held that far-away look, staring into space, and now and again he picked up the scrap of paper bearing the address young Elliott had written and scanned it closely.

"By cracky!" he said, an hour after being left alone. "By cracky by jing! It might be, you know. . . . It may be, possibly, perhaps might be!"

Thereupon he rose, went to a wall telephone and put in a call for Nathan Bridger, general manager of the Badger Forest Products company, of Beach Ridge, Wisconsin.

After this he stood for a time in the front window, peering out into the street. A man came along the sidewalk, a man of about Able's years, bearing a limp and rusty bag which stamped him as a physician. He approached the entry.

"Big day, Able,"—as the justice opened the door.

"Yeah. Big."

"Old Don's back."

"So I heard."

"Bad shape, too."

"I heard that. Real bad, Emory?" Emory Sweet nodded gravely.

"Heart's like a sponge. He can't last long. . . Nick was all for sending him back to Hemlock, but I told him it would be murder to move him now."

"Oh, Nick showed up, did he? Doesn't like the notion of Don's being in this vicinity."

"It's about as popular with him as smallpox. When I'd prevailed on him to let Don alone I told him the truth; that he can't last more than a few weeks and Nick looked like a man who . . . well, like one who'd heard good news."

Able nodded. "Safer for Brandon to have him in his grave. But when old Don goes, seems like the last chance of ever clearing the thing up's gone too."

"Looks that way. Unless he'll talk before he dies."

"Even so, it wouldn't amount to much. He's an old bum: he was a known drunkard at the time. It happened so long ago, and with the courts controlled by who they are . . ."

"All but yours."

"And mine without any jurisdiction in sure-enough trouble."

The doctor started out, but halted in the doorway.

"Hear Harrington's gone."

"Yes. The Bull ran him out of town."

"Brandon?"

"Dont be simple, Emory. Who else?"

"He certainly can't forget the Hoot Owl, can he? What are you going to do now, Able?"

The other shook his head gravely.

"I wish I could give you an answer . . . or myself an answer. All forenoon I've had a feeling in that palm,"—extending his creased right hand, "as if the end of a rope were slipping through it."

"Tough," muttered the doctor as he went out.

An hour later Able Armitage left his office. He moved with great alacrity for one of his years and stopped only once and that was to draw Bird-Eye Blaine from the throng of onlookers that lined the sidewalk.

"Got your car in town, Bird-Eye?" he asked. "Have? Run her around by the jail, will you? Might need you; again I might not. Best to be prepared, though.

Bird-Eye nodded assent and the old justice went on.

Ben Elliott, solitary prisoner in the county jail, lay on the least objectionable of the bunks he found there, smoking and staring at the dingy ceiling.

He raised his head sharply when a key grated in the big steel door leading to the cell block and stopped puffing on his pipe when the opening barrier revealed Able Armitage.

"Hello, Judge!" Elliott cried and grinned.

Able wasted no time.

"I've just been talking with Bridger."

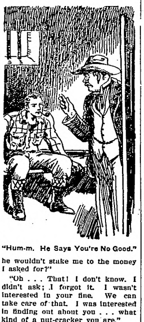
"Bridger! He here?"

"Oh, no. I called him on long distance." Able smiled as the other gave a puzzled frown. "Bridger and I are old friends. We fought Spain together . . . and malaria when we had Spain whipped. I think a lot of Bridger. I've a great respect for him and his opinions."

"So've I. Everybody has."

"Hum-m. He says you're no good."

Elliott started. "What-a-t? Why . . . That's funny. Do you mean he wouldn't stake me to the money I asked for?"



"Hum-m. He Says You're No Good."

"Oh . . . That! I don't know. I didn't ask; I forgot it. I wasn't interested in your fine. We can take care of that. I was interested in finding out about you . . . what kind of a nut-cracker you are."

The young gray eyes were studying the old blue ones closely, now.

"I found out," Able continued. "He says you're no good." In the pause the justice chuckled softly. "He says you're absolutely no good to yourself or anybody else. He tells me that you know more about logging and sawmills than any man your age has a right to know and he's seen a lot of men. He says you can make the worst crew that ever infested a shanty eat out of your hand. He says you don't know what it is to be tired or afraid. . . . And then he says again that you're no use on earth, so far as he can tell!"

Elliott was grinning a bit foolishly now and rubbed his chin.

Able went on:

"He told me that before the war—your war, not ours—they'd figured you as one of the prize young men in their organization but that since you've come home there's nothing you'll do. You can do anything, he says, but you won't. I asked him why and he said he guessed it was because everything they had to offer you was too simple, which I translated to mean that they haven't a good, tough hickory nut to offer you."

The other's rather embarrassed smile faded.

"I'm sorry! I think a lot of Mr. Bridger. He certainly has been white with me. I've tried, Judge. Honest, I've tried to give 'em all I had but . . . But he's right. The war upset me, like a lot of others. I haven't got my feet on the ground yet. After the big show everything else seems too d—d easy!"

"Likely. You haven't tried my job yet," Able said gravely.

"Being a justice in Tincup?"

"No. Not that. My real job—my real, tough nut—is being administrator for an estate. The McManus estate, which is nothing more than as pretty a piece of hardwood as ever stood outdoors. The Hoot Owl stuff we call it. Trying to operate it to a profit and hang on as administrator so some other man won't step in and give that stuff away is my particular hard nut. And it's a chore, Elliott.

"I like the way that you looked at Nick Brandon in court this afternoon. No young man has looked at him that way since I can remember. That's why I telephoned Bridger: because I liked the way you looked at Brandon and because I'm about worn out trying to crack a hard nut. That's why I'm here.

"Maybe, from what Bridger told me, and from what I've seen of you, you might maybe, perhaps, like to take a crack at this nut. The fact is, I'm through, Elliott. I've given the job all I have. I'm at my wit's end and the estate's at its rope's end. We're licked, as we stand now, and the truth is that maybe, perhaps, possibly I might do a right fair job of begging you to come and help me!"

Youth Congress Asks Vote on War Entry

be some real democracy in it. They voted to endorse a measure that would require a ratification of a declaration of war by a majority of the people before Congress should have power to declare war or use the armed forces for any fighting except for defense of the boundaries of the United States from actual invasion. They further pledged themselves to conduct test straw votes on the measure in their communities, to prove that a majority of the American people are in favor of it, as a protection against being pushed into war by a self-seeking minority against the will of the people. Some of the delegates had conducted such votes before coming to the Congress and reported overwhelming majorities in favor.

Backing the Lundeen unemployment insurance bill, and the thirty hour week, the Congress further endorsed organization of workers in white collar jobs as well as in industry and agriculture.

Hitting at the agricultural program of the New Deal, the delegates asked for cost of production and security of tenure on the land They decried the sales tax in any form.

The Congress called on all who believe that the solution of the economic and social difficulties exist in America will come through greater voice and control of the workers and farmers, rather than the few who control the industrial and financial system, to join in a program of supporting and strengthening the organizations of workers and farmers. The Declaration stated that this would build strength to win benefits for the present and to prepare for the solution of "the ultimate problem of changing this system and replacing it by a new social order."

A Continuation Committee, with headquarters at Hotel Frederic St Paul, was set up to carry on the work of the Congress. It includes members of all types of organizations attending.

With a wide range of views held by the delegates, the Congress showed unusual determination to unite in a program aimed at the fundamental problems in building a new social order." said Howard Y. Williams, national director of the League for Independent Political Action, which called the conference. "If adults displayed the same vigorous attitude as these young people, social justice would not be far away."

Seed Treating Very Important says Speaker

them devise plans for seed treatment.

Mr. Allison presented the idea of having a seed treating service for farmers set up at a community treating plant or local elevators where large scale methods could be used. This method is being used to a good advantage in many counties.

The cost of this service has been about 3c per bushel at other places when operated on a large scale. A large number of farmers expressed a desire to treat their grain at central points if opportunity were provided to do so.

Mr. Woolhouse of the Osborne-McMillan Co., was very much in favor of this plan and made the proposition to the farmers of this locality that if a sufficient number should express a wish to have his organization render this service, he was sure installation of the equipment could be arranged.

Farmers were enthusiastic over the possibilities of the newer methods of seed treatment. In closing, farmers were reminded that in order to realize the most lasting benefits from the seed treating program, they should encourage their neighbors to treat their seed grain.

Mattress Factory for Willmar

L. H. Jacobson, industrial engineer for the SERA work division, has announced plans for the operation of a matress manufacturing plant in Willmar. The new plant will have a capacity of about 300 mattresses weekly, and will employ an average of 250 persons from the relief rolls each month. With the recent addition of a plant in St. Cloud, the number of mattress making units in the state has been brought to five. Others are located in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth. These plants, Mr. Jacobson said, employ between 600 and 700 relief clients. Materials are furnished the SERA without cost by the Federal Surplus Relief corporation and the finished articles are distributed among state relief clients.

Review of the Legislature

INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE DODGES FACTS; HIRES SLEUTHS TO GATHER FAKE EVIDENCE

By A. I. Harris

While the sleuth committete of the state Senate last week took time out to recover its breath from the sad disappointment occasioned by failure to find anything wrong with relief administration, James A. Carley, its chairman, gave proof not only of his complete unfitness to conduct an impartian inquiry into the affairs of state departments but that the entire proceedings are grounded in dishonesty.

Before a word of testimony competent or otherwise, had been presented to his committee, Senator Carley launched an attack against highway department expenditures which only a man completely ignorant of the facts and blinded by intense prejudice could have done. Senator Carley's attack is complete substantiation that the so-called investigating committee, loaded with reactionaries has written its finings in advance and that the taking of testimony is merely a sham and a fraud.

At the same time, word has leaked out from behind the barred doors where reactionary members of the committee get their heads together, that Carley called his fellow conspirators "on the carpet" because they fell down completely in their assignments as sleuths and snoopers. Real sleuths who are more familiar with the fine arts of the profession and more capable of asesmbling fake evidence, are now being hired at $7 per diem.

The Legislature has before it the problem of raising $3,400,000 additional annual highway revenues to match federal aid and provide jobs instead of doles for drouth-stricken farmers and Minnesota workingmen. This calls for serious study but Senator Carley and his clique in the Senate motor vehicle tax committee rushed out a recommendation for a continued reduction in motor vehicle license fees after deliberately dodging facts and inviting misinformation

The opportunity of providing work for 14,000 men on Minnesota highways, with the federal government paying half the cost, was brushed aside as unimportant.

Said Senator Carley: Enough could have been saved on highway payrolls to match federal aid.

The facts: The highway department could have discharged every maintenance employe in the state for the entire year 1934 and not even approach such a saving.

Charged Senator Carley: Waste! . . . Extravagance! . . . Monkey business!

Public records show: Per mile maintenance costs on trunk highways in 1932 were $217.85; in 1933 $212.81; in 1934, 212.63.

Senator Carley and his clique made much ado of alleged increases in payrolls of the highway department in 1933 and 1934. They did not mention the fact that under federal regulations, thousands of farmers and workingmen were given direct employment on force account jobs paid with federal funds, and that each of these men was carried on the books as a highway employe and paid individually, whereas before they were paid by a contractor and the department handed over one large check to cover the entire cost of the job.

Neither did the Carley clique mention the very significant fact that owing to the huge unemployment problem in the state, maintenance crews have cut down to a part time basis so that more men could share in the available wage money. This is what is known as staggered employment; it divides state road funds among a larger number of men but gives the individual a smaller amount.

The Carleyites were not interested in such facts. They brushed aside highway officials with public records of data in order to bring into the testimony vague accusations and unprovable and unfounded charges and assertions They even gave much time to hearing irresponsible statements from men with no means of knowing the facts.

The prying virus gave birth to a new investigation, for the ostensible purpose of determining anticipated revenue is to be conducted into the Liquor Control commission. The resolution asking for this investigation was introduced by Senator Rockne. It is said that the real purpose behind this investigation is to furnish an excuse to further delay the $10.000,000 relief bill, which is to be met by liquor receipt funds.

The relief bills are no nearer final passage than they were three weeks ago. The latest delay was occasioned by the decision of the reactionaries to send two members of the Senate and two members of the House on a junket to Washington to interview Harry Hopkins and Senator Shipstead They will try to convince the federal government that relief rules should be modified for the benefit of Minnesota, so that the present drouth relief limit of $25.00 per month per livestock "unit" of 10 can be raised to $35.00 or $40.00 As the situation is now, telegrams from the drouth area continue to pour in to the Capitol and nothing delnite is done to hasten the badly needed legislation. The number of people on relief will materially increase if cattle are allowed to starve.

The reactionaries are in a dilemna in their plans for tax revision. It is no secret that they are in favor of some form of sales tax, which, in the last analysis is a tax on poverty. As the representatives of wealth in government, they are opposed to a system which taxes wealth heavily On the other hand, they are quite aware that the Governor will veto any tax which throws the load on those not having the means or the ability to pay; and despite well organized and amply financed lobbies which are interested in putting over a sales tax, it appears extremely unlikely that enough legislators can be lined up in favor of it to overcome the Governor's veto.

Hysterical conferences are being held behind closed doors in an effort to map out a program which will defeat the Governor's opposition. It has been proposed that a constitutional amendment be submitted to the people limiting the rate of assessment on real property in the hope that when the next legislative session rolls around someone more favorable to the wealthy taxpayer will be found in the governor's chair.

Although the tactics of the conservative groups in the Legislature was to make a show of progressive legislation at the beginning for the double purpose of setting themselves right with the people and covering up their ulterior objectives, they are beginning to display their true colors—that they are representatives not of the people but of the wealthy and corporate interests. A tiger cannot shed his stripes nor a leopard his spots.

Senator MacKenzie, conservative leader and former national Republican from Minnesota, has introduced a bill in the Senate which would enable the large lumber companies to purchase tax delinquent lands at a song. The bill would amend the laws of 1933 Chapter 407, Section 1, which provides that the owner of any land sold for taxes for either the years 1926 or 1927, which shall have become forfeited to the state for taxes, shall have the option to repurchase the land any time within one year from the date of forfeiture for one-half of the amount of taxes accrued less penalties, interest and costs, provided, that no owner shall repurchase more than 320 acres or more than two platted lots not exceeding one-third of an acre in area in any city, borough or village. Mr. MacKenzie's bill removes all limitations as to the amount of land the owner can repurchase, making it possible for the big lumber companies to again take over huge areas, which are now coming back to second growth of timber and which will again become valuable for wood production purposes.

Biggest Appropriation For Army in 15 Years Is Approved by Committee

The bigest spending program ever inaugurated by the United States was OKed by the Appropriations committee of the United States House of Representatives when it set its stamp of approval on an expenditure of $318,131,482 by the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936. The committee also stated it is ready to provide additional funds if the President will increase the army's strength to 165,000 men. It now has a strength of 118,750.

Taking into account the expenditures for the navy, the 1936 budget for national defense is the largest since the enactment of the budget law in 1921.

The reactionaries are in a dilemna in their plans for tax revision. It is no secret that they are in favor of some form of sales tax, which, in the last analysis is a tax on poverty. As the representatives of wealth in government, they are opposed to a system which taxes wealth heavily On the other hand, they are quite aware that the Governor will veto any tax which throws the load on those not having the means or the ability to pay; and despite well organized and amply financed lobbies which are interested in putting over a sales tax, it appears extremely unlikely that enough legislators can be lined up in favor of it to overcome the Governor's veto.

Hysterical conferences are being held behind closed doors in an effort to map out a program which will defeat the Governor's opposition. It has been proposed that a constitutional amendment be submitted to the people limiting the rate of assessment on real property in the hope that when the next legislative session rolls around someone more favorable to the wealthy taxpayer will be found in the governor's chair.

Although the tactics of the conservative groups in the Legislature was to make a show of progressive legislation at the beginning for the double purpose of setting themselves right with the people and covering up their ulterior objectives, they are beginning to display their true colors —that they are representatives not of the people but of the wealthy and corporate interests. A tiger cannot shed his stripes nor a leopard his spots.

Senator MacKenzie, conservative leader and former national Republican from Minnesota, has introduced a bill in the Senate which would enable the large lumber companies to purchase tax delinquent lands at a song. The bill would amend the laws of 1933. Chapter 407, Section 1, which provides that the owner of any land sold for taxes for either the years 1926 or 1927, which shall have become forfeited to the state for taxes, shall have the option to repurchase the land any time within one year from the date of forfeiture for one-half of the amount of taxes accrued less penalties, interest and costs, provided, that no owner shall repurchase more than 320 acres or more than two platted lots not exceeding one-third of an acre in area in any city, borough or village. Mr. MacKenzie's bill removes all limitations as to the amount of land the owner can repurchase, making it possible for the big lumber companies to again take over huge areas, which are now coming back to second growth of timber and which will again become valuable for wood production purposes.

Biggest Appropriation For Army in 15 Years Is Approved by Committee

The bigest spending program ever inaugurated by the United States was OKed by the Appropriations committee of the United States House of Representatives when it set its stamp of approval on an expenditure of $318,131,482 by the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936. The committee also stated it is ready to provide additional funds if the President will increase the army strength to 165,000 men. It now has a strength of 118,750.

Taking into account the expenditures for the navy, the 1936 budget for national defense is the largest since the enactment of the budget law in 1921.

HOUSECLEANING IN STATE DEPTS. DUE, IS REPORT

Gov. Olson and Dept. Heads Promise Action to Ass'n Committee

QUISTOUSTER IS RUMORED

County Farmer-Laborites Are Aroused Over Actions Of 'Investigator'

A general housecleaning of all state departments under farmer-labor control is under way, according to advices from St. Paul this week. A meeting was held at the St. Paul Labor Temple last Saturday which was attended by Governor Olson, the Farmer-Labor department heads and a committee on placements from the Farmer-Labor association.

A survey is under way in all farmer-labor controlled departments, the report states, with a view of "weeding out the disloyal and old party employees." The governor and the department heads discussed the situation in several departments where employees were disloyal to the administration and to the party ticket in the last campaign, the report states, and these antagonistic employees, whether originally Farmer-Laborites or members of some other party will be speedily detached from the state payroll.

I. C. Strout, state budget and personnel commissioner. stated that there are ten applications to every job that is in the power of the administration to fill. Mr. Strout discloses that due to the acute employment situation thru-

OLSON TAKES 2 STRAIGHT FROM HETLAND TUES.

State Regulation Bars Glove Encounters at Local Athletic Show

Glen Olson, 191, threw Louis Hetland, 181, two straight falls in the main go at the athletic show in the old Elks hall Tuesday evening. A crowd which filled the hall to capacity witnessed the program, and their enthusiasm was not dampened by the fact that the boxing bouts had to be cancelled because state rulings make it imposible for the local promoters to comply with the regulations governing the fistic art.

Olson took both falls with a cross body lock and used seven minutes to turn the trick each time. Hetland is a clever and game wrestler but Olson's greater weight and strength was too much for him.

The most exciting bout of the evening was between Young Wedul of Hazel and Marcus Olson of this city. While Olson was the aggressor all the way and had Wedul tired at the finish, the youngster showed a knowledge of ring science and skill which made him a tough customer even for a man with Olson's experience and strength. Olson won the fall but everyone was so excited that none knew how long it took nor what hold he used.

Ted Berggren and Geo. Radick put up a fine exhibition wherein it seemed that Radick had the edge until the finish which came unexpectedly when Berggren lifted his adversary off his feet with a crotch hold and half Nelson and threw him on the mat pinning him. Jim Radick of Oklee lost one fall to Vern Melby of Viking and forfeited the second when he was unable to continue after five minutes of fast milling.

Stanley Rodnicki of Oklee, who met Tex Norquist here two weeks ago issued a blanket challenge to meet anyone up to 175 pounds at the next show which will take place on Tuesday, March 12. As yet there are no takers. He offered to take on Glenn Olson and says "Never mind the difference in weight," but Promoter Bill LaVave feels that there is too much difference, there being about 30 to 35 pounds discrepancy and wants to hear from two men, one for Olson and another for Rodnicki. "If you think you're good, here's your chance to show it," Bill says.

Sailor Cantfield met Rex Johnson and the two mixed it a merry clip for 15 minutes without either gaining a fall. It was fast work. Young Comstock met Young Iverson in the curtain raiser but no fall resulted in a five-minute set-to.

DIRECTS COLLEGE BAND

Prof. J. A. Holvik

CONCORDIA BAND TO GIVE CONCERT HERE MARCH 10th

Famous Band to be Presented Under The Auspices of the Municipal Band at aud.

Announcement has been made that the famous Concordia Concert Band of Concordia College, Moorhead, Minn., will appear here in concert at the Auditorium in Thief River Falls, on March 10, at 3 p. m.

Special interest is attached to this concert, since during the coming summer of 1935 the Concordia Concert Band will tour Norway under the auspices of Normandsforbundet, an International league of Norsemen, from whom the invitation came through Arne Kildahl, Oslo, Norway, secretary general of the Forbund. This organization will arrange the entire itinerary for this band while abroad, marking the first time that a Concordia musical organization has visited foreign shores.

The possibility of making the concert tour first presented itself as a result of official connections the band enjoyed with the Kingdom of Norway at the Century of Progess in Chicago in 1933. At the fair the band played under the auspices of the Norwegian government being the official band for Soerlandet, Norway's student training exhibit.

The proposed itinerary already prepared will bring the band to Oslo, then to eastern Norway, across the mountains to Trondhjem, down through the coastal cities and back to Oslo.

The concert here will be given under the auspices of the Municipal band.

COUNCIL VOTES TO BUY EUREKA FIRE HOSE, TUES

500 Ft. of Hose to be Bought at $1.10 per foot Less 2% Cash Disc.

$9,495 VOTED FOR TRUCK

19 Warrants on Current Expense Fund to Pay for New Fire Truck

The Eureka Fire Hose company was awarded the contract to supply the city with 500 feet of hose at the regular meeting of the city council Tuesday evening. This is the same company that fire hose was brought from by the previous council two years ago. The bid accepted by the council called for 500 feet of 2½ inch hose with couplings for $1.10 per foot of the first grade stock carried by the Eureka company.

Bids were closed Tuesday night with the following bids in when the council met: Eureka Hose Co., with prices of $1.10, $1.05, $1.00, $0.94 and $0.84 per foot; Oens Merc. Co., bid $0.84, $0.94, $0.90 and $0.95 per foot; Kelly Hardware submitted bids of $1.05, $0.84, $0.94; the W. S. Knott Company bids were $1.20; $1.10, $1.05, $0.90 and $0.84; and the Hewitt Rubber Company submitting bids of $0.84 and $0.94. After discussing the matter over with members of the local fire department it was decided to purchase the product offered by the Eureka company as the product was known to have been serviceable and of high quality. A two per cent cash discount is to be allowed if paid within sixty days. The ballot of the council disclosed that the group was unanimously in favor of the product recommended by the firemen and Alderman Christofferson moved to accept the bid of the Eureka company.

The A. B. Langelette property, which has been condemned by the city, and which was appealed to the district court, was brought up and it was agreed to lay the matter over until the October term of court and Mr. Langelette was to be allowed the use of the property until March 1, 1936.

It was moved and seconded to issue $9,495 worth of warrants on the current expense fund of the city to pay for the fire truck which was purchased last spring by the council. These warrants were to be drawn in the amounts of eighteen for $500 and one for the sum of $495 and to be made payable to the Oen Mercantile Co., of Thief River Falls.

Other business which was taken up by the council at this meeting were the granting of milk and cream licenses to Godfred Larson, C. T. Thompson and to L. H. Korupp. A soft drink license was granted to Mrs. R. G. Sager at the Thoreson oil station west of the city by the Great Northern tracks. The beer license of Efteland was transferred to P. Roark upon request of Mr. Efteland and Mr. Roark.

A total of 5,612 persons including 956 women were placed on regular and temporary jobs by the National Reemployment Serviie in Minnesota during the month of January, according to an announcement by Dreng Bjornaraa, state director. The National Reemployment Service operates offices in the territory outside of Hennepin and Ramsey counties and the City of Duluth.

Of the jobs cleared through the Service, 1167 were on public works projects; 351 Emergency Relief Administration non-relief placements; and 4,094 in private industries and with local governmental units. During the month, 43,560 persons visited or made contact with the Reemployment offices. Of this number seeking employment, 3,196 were applicants who had visited the offices for the first time. 786 of the new applicants were women.

In December, the number of persons calling upon the offices for employment numbered 39,595, of whom 2,803 were new applicants, indicating an increase of about 4,000 persons making demands for jobs.

The requirements of the State Emergency Relief Administration that all employable relief clients must be registered for employment has brought in many new applicants to the reemployment offices.

On January 31st, the number of person whose applications for employment were in the active file numbered 50,000 men and 6,200 women. These persons had renewed their applications during the preceding 30 days. A considerable increase in employment activities is expected to begin the first of March.

DISTRICT B. B. PLAY-OFF HERE MARCH 6,7,&8

Prowlers Lead District with 5 Wins and 3 Loses; E. G. F. 2nd

By L. F. Harris

The slump which the Prowlers seem to have fallen into during the past two weeks was apparently over with Friday night when they defeated a strong Bemidji quint 33 to 23 at the auditorium. During the past week the boys have not run up very high scores on their opponents and lost a game to East Grand Forks, which early season indications seemed to point to as imposible.

The regular season has now been completed and only one game remains on the Prowler schedule before the district tournament which will be played at the auditorium in this city March 6, 7, and 8. As a wind-up thriller for the current season Grand Forks, the first team to defeat the locals this year will attempt to repeat their victory here March first. The Grand Forks quint is in all probability the strongest team the Prowlers will meet anywhere outside of the state tournament if and when they reach that stage of play.

Judging from the past season of play and by getting out the "dope" sheet the Prowlers should win both the district and regional trophies. Teams which are the strongest contenders for the championship in both the district and the region, by comparative scores, have all been defeated twice by the locals with the exception of East Grand Forks which managed to win one of the two contests from the Thief River team. All victories won on the home floor were decisive and the only close games were those played in the district on the opponents' floor; this should give the boys quite an advantage as the district tournament will be played at home, and the prospective regional contenders will meet the winner of this district on "foreign soil," at Crookston, who will either be eliminated by, or will eliminate, Thief River.

With this method of calculation it can be seen that if Thief River should win the district tournament, it will have an advantage all through the rest of the play towards the state title.

A large turn-out of fans on March first to get an idea on how the future state basket-ball champions will look against one of North Dakota's strongest basketball teams is expected.

Waldal Gets Legislative Seat Against Voters Will

Vox populi was disregarded by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota Tuesday afternoon, when they voted to seat Marius Waldal, conservative opponent of W. E. Day for the House seat from the 65th legislative district. After hearing the majority report of the Elections Committee, which was in favor of Waldal, and the minority report in favor of Day, the body voted to seat Waldal in spite of the fact that W. E. Day received a majority of votes from the people, as was brought out by the minority report.

LABOR COLLEGE IS 'INVESTIGATED' BY ARKANSAS SOLONS

Instructors and Students Are Made Butt of Plantation Owners Red Baiting

On Saturday, Feb. 16, a committee created by the Arkansas State Legislature investigated Commonwealth College, Mena, Ark. They spent quite a few hours at the labor college, flanked with several officials. the county sheriff, and a few newspaper men.

At the close of the investigation subpoenas were issued to a dozen Comomnwealth instructors and students. They were transported to Mena for further questioning at a closed hearing. Requests for an open hearing, the right to have their own stenographer present, and the presence of legal counsel, ewre denied.

Lucien Koch, youthful director of Commonwealth, was grilled for six or seven hours, and other witnesses for shorter periods. The committee concentrated on the questions of religion, sex, race equality, communism, violence, etc.

On the same day this investigation took place, the Arkansas House of Representatives passed a bill making the possession of "seditious" literature a felony. Both the newspapers and the proponents of the Bill in the House stated openly that this bill was aimed at Commonwealth College.

It is a known fact that these developments are the direct outcome of the work of college members among the sharecroppers, miners, and unemployed. Lucien Koch, director, and Atley Delaney and Bob Reed, students, have been actively organizing the sharecroppers, both black and white, into a union. For this they recently spent some time in a county jail at Lepanto, Ark. The charge was "inciting to riot"; as a matter of fact the riot was caused by a group of rich planters who broke up a union meeting. This rich planter class, who practically control things in that section of the south, have been instrumental in causing the investigation of Commonwealth College.

During all these happenings, the school has stressed its non-factionalism, and has striven not to antagonize all right-thinking people. If the bill making possession of so-called seditious literature a felony becomes a law, it is thought that most of the textbooks used at Commonwealth will be banned: for past experience has shown that any book is seditious which displeases the ruling class.

Protest letters and telegrams are pouring in upon the investigating committee at Little Rock, Ark., as a result of the publicity given the case by the daily newspapers.

Man 92 Years Old Breaks Leg at Hip and Recovers

Andrew Torgerson, a bachelor, living about two and a half miles out of the city, is recovering nicely from an intra-capsular fracture of the hip, accroding to his physician.

Mr. Torgerson, who is 92 years old, was found lying on the floor of his house by a neighbor, Fred Kramer, who became suspicious when he noticed that the shades were still drawn over the windows at 2 p. m. Being removed to a local hospital, it was found that the leg was broken at the hip. The break was then two or three days old. After ten days at the hospital, he was taken to the Kramer place and is being cared for there. His physician states that in spite of his age, he is apparently healing up fine and is in great spirits, hoping to be able to be about again soon.

Donavan Matson, student at the University of Minnesota, spent the week end at his home in this city.

ANNUAL CONV. OF WOOL MEN HELD IN CITY

Annual Meeting of Minnesota Cooperative Wool Growers Held Wednesday

WOOL AUTHORITIES TALK

Gov. Man Tells Convention Producers Must Help Sell Their Product

Approximately 500 wool growers from throughout the state met at the Municipal auditorium Wednesday at the annual meeting of the Minnesota Co-operative Wool Growers Association. Arrangements for the convention were in charge of R. J. Lund, manager of the T. R. F. wool marketing agency.

Alex Huddleston, President of the Association, gave figures showing the comparative cost of grading wool at the various centers in the state in the opening address of the afternoon session which was open to the general public. He brought out that the highest price paid for the grading of wool in Minnesota was approximately 80c per hundred pounds which was paid at Morris, and the price paid in T. R. Falls was 54c per 100 pounds. This wool is graded by a travelling grader which is moved about to the different wool markets in the state, stopping two or three days at each center. He also told how small dealers tried to take advantage of the cooperative marketing by buying up large quantities of wool on the farms, and then bringing it in to the cooperative market and attempting to unload at a profit to themselves, but this was not allowed, he stated.

By attending the meeting of the South Dakota Association, Mr. Huddleston stated that the knowledge he gained at this convention he used in laying out the program for the convention held here. Nominations for directors was declared in order and the following men were elected: W. L. Edwards of Roseau, re-elected; J. E. Graham of Chokio, re-elected and J. S. Jones, secretary of the Minnesota Farm Bureau, was elected to fill the unexpired term left vacant by Austin Johnson of Littlefork, who resigned from the board of directors due to his intention of

FARMERS BRING STARVING COWS TO LEGISLATORS

Senate Passes $500,000 Relief Bill at Once, House Acts Today

Sudden action was taken by the Minnesota Legislature yesterday when they were given an original view of the condition of the drouth starved cattle of the western part of Minnesota and an emergency bill appropriating $500,000 for the purchase of relief feed was passed by the Senate.

A cow, a horse and a pig, in very emaciated condition due to the lack of feed, were brought in from Big Stone county and placed on the front steps of the Capitol. A bill was introduced in the senate in less than two minutes after the session was called to order and with only a few minor changes it was passed unanimously by the senate. The bill will come up in the House today and it is expected that it will go through the House with very little opposition. Administration of relief will be thru the executive council.

Purchase of Mud Lake Area is Being Pushed

Following recent approval by federal authorities the work of purchasing 52,713 acres in the Mud Lake wild migratory waterfowl resting and nesting area in northwestern Minnesota is being pushed with the Minnesota Department of Conservation co-operating in "every posible manner," according to E. V. Willard, Conservation Commissioner.

Surveys of the proposed area are completed and physical improvements are planned for early spring as soon as weather permits.

Assurances have been received from Washington that federal officials are interested in obtaining additional areas in this state for migratory waterfowl restoration purposes, Mr. Willard stated.

Dowell Speaks to "U" Staff On Direct Marketing Mon.

Superintendent A. A. Dowell of the Northwest School addressed the College and Experiment Station staff at University Farm, St. Paul, on Monday of this week on the study relating to the direct marketing of hogs, which was recently released by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics at Washington. According to Mr. Dowell, a summary of the study may be secured by writing to the Chief of the Bureau in care of the Department of Agriculture. The complete report which caries the data and analysis upon which the summary is based is now in the hands of the government printer and will be available for distribution within the next few weeks.

"Farmers throughout the nation have been eagerly awaiting the report of this study which was made at the urgent request of market, producer and packer interests," Dr. Dowell said. "This vexing question, which has been the subject of nation-wide discussion for many years, has now been deinitely settled," he continued, "and attention is now being focused on the suggestions carried in this report.

"The study shows that direct marketing has not lowered the price level on hogs; it has not added to the cost of marketing hogs; nor has it reduced net return to hog producers. Direct marketing developed as a result of powerful economics forces, including the shift in corn and hog production; granting of concentration privileges by railroads which encouraged direct marketing, at country points, but was denied most public markets, thus injuring the latter's order buying business; the establishment of a freight structure that favored the shipment of hog products rather than live hogs from the western corn belt to eastern consuming centers; the lower wage level at interior packing points; to the development of good roads and the use of trucks; and to marked change in methods of communication such as telephone and radio market news service.

"Since direct marketing has certain economic advantages it should not be prohibited but rather should be given such supervision as will be of value to producers. Hogs should be sold on a basis of grade at all markets: interior prices should be quoted as a range rather than a 'board' price plus an unknown 'add'; filling hogs should be discontinued except f- humanitarian purposes, and the Federal Market News service should be expanded.

Farmers are not interested merely in preserving or promoting any method of marketing as such. but rather in the kind of service that will give them the greatest net return. The future of producers marketing agencies will depend upon the ability of its leaders to face the facts and keep abreast of changing economic conditions. There is no reason to suppose that there is not room for both types of marketing. The relative position of each in the long run will depend upon the service rendered."

Two Artificial Lakes are Proposed for kittson Co.

In response to requests from officials in Kittson county, the Minnesota SERA wil ldispatch hydraulic engineers on a mission to study the possibilities of building dams in the forks of Two Rivers to regulate the flow of water and create artificial lakes at two points.

A dam at Bronson on the south branch of Two Rivers would cause a body of water to form in a natural lake to the east. A second lake would result from a dam in the north fork of the river, at Lancaster. A series of small dams in the middle fork would guarantee the city of Hallock an adequate water supply at all times, it was said.

In support of the plan the sponsors point out that the two lakes would provide great recreational benefits to the people in adjacent communities. The lakes would be ideal playgrounds in the summer. Fish could be supplied by the state game and fish commission, and in general, the program would tend to conserve the wild life in the region.

PUBLIC SAFETY MAGAZINE LAYS INCREASE HIGHWAY CARNAGE TO THE REPEAL

Statistics Show that The "Had Been Drinking" Drivers are Responsible

By W. G. Calderwood

"The National Safety Council has statistics to show that the influence of alcohol on traffic accidents has increased tremendously following the repeal of prohibition," according to the February number of "Public Safety." Moreover, this alarming increase is in the face of the fact that safety activity reached high peak in 1934.

Fatal accidents in which the driver involved "had been drinking" increased 29 per cent in 1934, under repeal, as compared with 1933, while the number of "had been drinking" pedestrians who were killed on the highways increased 53 per cent. The article gives emphasis to the fact that many of the persons involved "seemed sober to the casual observer, but were actually under the influence of alcohol."

The magazine emphasizes that its statements are absolutely untinged by either 'wet' or 'dry' sentiment," and states that the cause is not so much the drunken driver as it is the drinking driver—the driver who has only "been drinking." "Such arrests have increased in nearly all cities," continues the article, "with varying percentages. In Cleveland and Chicago, for example, the 'drinking driver' arrests have mounted several per cent." The records quoted show an increase of 80 per cent in Duluth, 95 per cent in Erie, 100 per cent in Rochester, N. Y., and 450 per cent in Pittsburgh.

"After one year of repeal, highway safety authorities frankly admit concern over the menace of the drinking driver, whose devastating trail of injury and death has widened steadily during the past twelve months. The intoxicated driver of course, was with us prior to repeal, but the easy access of alcohol following that event has greatly increased the number of accidents in which liquor is a contributing factor."

The fact that the greatest highway carnage of record was in the year of maximum safety activity must be charged to repeal.

Chisago Chain of Lakes Project up to Washington

The receding shorelines in Chisago, Sunrise and Green lakes will be restored to normal at a cost of $500,000, if the federal government assigns this sum for the purpose, it is announced by L. P. Zimmerman, acting administrator, Minnesota SERA.

"Minnesota has asked Washington for $8,000,000 to finance eight specified work relief projects, and the Chisago chain of lakes is one of them," Mr. Zimmerman stated.

"It is sound from an engineering standpoint," the acting administrator explained, "and will not only temporarily relief hardships due to unemployment, but also yield permanent benefits to the communities situated in the area."

Commonwealth Plan by Canadian Coop. Leader

Socialidation of the financial structure, abolition of the profit system and the taking over of industry to be operated for use is the 3-point program of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation of Canada, M. J. Coldwell of Regina, provincial leader of the movement said in an address before a special meeting of the Saturday Lunch Club, of Minneapolis recently.

Mr. Coldwell later addressed the Minnesota House of representatives.

Harry Fitterman of the lunch club, in introducing Mr. Coldwell, said the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation is "really the farmer-labor party in Canada."

"We look with favor on branch banking because it tends to centralize the system of banking and thus make it easier for us to take it over when we gain control of the Canadian government, which we expect to do within the next five years," Mr. Coldwell said.

New Deal Like Frenchman's Cocktail, Says Laidler

New Orleans, La.—"The Roosevelt New Deal is like the Frenchman's description of an American cocktail: You put whiskey in it to make it strong, and water to make it weak; lemon to make it sour, and sugar to make it sweet; ice to make it cold, and gin to make it hot. And then you say, 'Here's to you!' and drink it yourself." This was the way in which Harry W. Laidler executive director for the League for Industrial Democracy, summarized the contradictions in the Roosevelt program in an address here.

M. The sale will be conducted at the Deutsches House, 444 Rice street, St. Paul, located back of the State Office Building.

FLOWAGE RIGHTS EXAMINED FOR L. TRAVERSE RESERVOIR

Necessary flowage rights for the Lake Traverse-Bois de Sioux water control plan are being investigated in detail by appraisers from the work division of the Minnesota SERA. With headquarters at Wheaton, the appraisers will start preparing field roports covering legal information concerning each piece of land affected.

This project, requiring an expenditure of $1,500,000, is reported to have ben given preferred listing for immediate construction under President Roosevelt's four-billion-dollar work program. It is one of several tangible propositions in the government's efforts to solve the critical problem of water shortage in the Red River drainage area.

Federal Government Gives Out Annual Livestock Report

Washington, D. C., Feb. 15, 1935—A decrease in the number and an increase in value of each species of livestock on farms January 1, 1935, compared with January 1, 1934, are shown by the annual inventory estimates of livestock on farms made by the crop reporting board of the Department of Agriculture. This is the first time on record when there was a decrease in every species in the same year. The decrease on January 1, 1935, in percentages of the January 1, 1934 numbers were as follows: Horses one per cent, mules three per cent, all cattle eleven per cent, hogs 35 per cent and sheep five per cent. When the numbers of all species are converted to animal units, which allow for differences in size and feed requirements of the several species, the composite decrease was about 13 per cent. This decrease was more than twice as large as has occurred in any other year of record, since 1890, and the number of animal units on the farms January 1, 1935, was the smallest in the present century. The total values of all livestock on farms January 1, 1935, was $3,102,136,000. This was an increase of $225,292,000 or about eight per cent over the value on January 1, 1934, and the highest January value since 1931. The value per head of each species on January 1 this year was higher than a year ago and the increase in value per head this year more than offset the decrease in numbers with a resulting total value for each species larger than on January 1, 1934. The increase in value per head was most marked in the case of hogs and mules and least i- the case of sheep. These inventory values of livestock on farms -s of January 1, should not be confused with the value of livestock production or with the income from livestock/which will be determined later.

Horses—

The estimated number of horses on farms January 1, 1935 was 1',827,000 head, a decrease of 136,000 head or about one per cent from a year earlier and the smallest decrease in one year since numbers began their steady decline about twenty years ago. There was a marked decrease in the number of colts raised in 1934. The estimated number under one year old on January 1, 1935, was 692,000 head, 27 per cent larger than a year earlier and the largest number since 1922. The value per head of all horses and colts on January 1, 1935, was $76.18 compared with $66.30 a year earlier. The total value this year was $901,038,000 compared with $793,155,000 a year earlier.

Mules—

The estimated number of mules on farms January 1, 1935, was 4,795,000 head, a decrease of 130,000 head or about three per cent from January 1, 1934. While there was some increase in the number of mule colts raised in 1934 compared with 1933, this increase was much less marked than with horse colts. The value per head of mules and colts on January 1, 1935, was $98.21 compared with $81.54 a year earlier. This was the highest value per head since January 1, 1921. The total values of all mules on January 1, 1936, was $470 900,000 compared with $401,596,000 a year ago.

The estimated number of all cattle and calves on farms January 1, 1935, was 60,667,000 head. This was a decrease of 7,523,000 head or over 11 per cent from the revised estimate of January 1, 1934. This was much the largest decrease in cattle numbers in one year on record and the total number is the lowest since 1930. The value per head on January 1, 1935, was $21.07 compared with $18.27 a year earlier and the total value this year was $1,278,327,000 compared with $1,247,491,000 a year ago. The estimated number of milk cows (cows and heifers two years old and over kept for milk) which is included in the total of all cattle on January 1, 1935, was 25,100,000 head, a decrease of 1,085,000 head or over four per cent from January 1, 1934. The value per head on January 1, 1935, was $30.38 compared with $27.11 a year earlier. The estimated number of yearling heifers being kept for milk cows on January 1, 1935, of 4,286,000 head was about 11 per cent smaller than a year earlier and the number of heifer calves being kept for milk cows declined six per cent from January 1, 1934, to January 1, 1935, while the total of al lother kinds of cattle and calves declined 17 per cent.

The estimated number of hogs on farms January 1, 1935 was 37,007,000 head. This was a decrease of 20,170,000 head or over 35 per cent from January 1, 1934. This was much the largest decrease in any year on record and the estimated number on January1 this year was the smallest in over fifty years. The number in the North Central states (corn belt) on January 1 this year was 24,011,000 head, which number was 41 per cent smaller than a year earlier. The value per head on January 1, 1935, was $6.41 compared with $4.14 a year earlier and the total value of $237,258,000 was a litte larger than a year earlier.

Sheep—

The estimated number of sheep on farms January 1, 1935 was 49,766,000 head. This number was 2,446,000 head or about five per cent smaelr than the number on January 1, 1934. The percentage decrease was about the same in stock sheep and in lambs and sheep on feed but there was a marked decrease in the number of old ewes in flocks in the western sheep states. The value per head on January 1, 1935, was $4.31 compared with $3.79 a year earlier and the total value this year was $214,613,000 compared with a year ago.

AMATEUR STAGE ASPIRANTS IN STATE-WIDE COMPETITION

Non-profesional actors and actresses will have their innings before the footlights this spring, in a state-wide one-act play contest sponsored by the recreation department of the Minesota SERA.

While the contest is primarily intended to discover merit in staging and performing, it will also offer opportunities to play-writers to have their one-act works produced according to T. A. Blank, assistant state supervisor of the SERA recreation activities.

Although professionals are barred as performers, they may qualify as directors. Due recognition will be accorded talent, no matter where found, whether in speaking roles or as dramatic coaches and directors, or as authors.

The state has been divided into eight regions within which community and district elimination series decide eligibility for the regional events. Productions remaining in these will be judged in the state finals. Dates for regional and state events will be announced later.

NORMAN THOMAS STRIKES AT NEW DISPENSATION

The Townsend Plan and Coolidge Prosperity Also Rapped by Socialist

The new deal is only an attempt to prop up outworn and broken-down capitalism, and the people have lost confidence in it," Norman Thomas, nationally known socialist and candidate for president in 1932, said Tuesday night, in addressing a audience at Adath Jeshurun synagog, Thirty-fourth street and Dupont avenue South.

"Roosevelt has merely borrowed a little socialist red paint for the pump he is trying to use, but it is the same old pump and isn't going to prime business recovery," he declared, asserting there is more unemployment now than there was a year ago.

The Socialist leader was in a happy mood, and his drives at the New Deal and the "gilt and tinsel of Coolidge prosperity," while sharp, had a humorous tinge.

He dismissed the Townsend old age pension plan as too expensive for practical operation. In reply to a question, he said he withheld judgment on the farmer-labor party in Minnesota until he had witnessed more of its performance.

The farmer-labor platform in the last campaign was a good one because it was largely socialist, but I want to see what they are going to do with it," he said. He advised socialists in Minnesota to vote with the farmer-labor party "to reform it."

Returning to the subject of his address, "Which Way America," he saw no hope for ultimate solution of national problems other than the abolition of the capitalistic system and the substitution of socialism with its co-operative ownership of the means of production.

"The socialist system offers the only practical way to insure the fair and equal distribution of wealth and promote general and dependable prosperity," he added. Rabbi Albert I. Gordon presided at the meeting and introduced Mr. Thomas.

RETAIN NO GAME AFTER FEBRUARY 28th

No game shall be retained in possession in Minnesota after Thursday, February 28. On that date all venison and bear meat must be used up as the legal possession limit under retaining tags issued by the state game and fish division ends.

No, Annette, repeal did not take political corruption out of the liquor traffic. The conviction of Chairman Cooper of the Iowa state liquor commission was only one of the many cases of spiritous wickedness in high places.

If the return to prosperity, as measured by increased industrial output and higher profits, is going to be accompanied by a desire to return to the wage philosophy of the 1920's, additional and more serious depressions are only a matter of a few years.—Robert F. Wagner.

WHAT PRICE BEER?

Last Friday evening we went to a movie. We don't often attend them lately. Time was, before we entered into the business of editing a newspaper, and our time was less completely occupied with our work, that we took in the showings on the silver screen quite regularly. Our children, however, are frequent attenders, just as are the children of most other parents in the community. In the future we shall attend less frequently than in the past and our children will cease attending completely, in so far as it is possible for us to stop them from going.

We have never had any illusions about the uplifting influence of the movies. When the children have requested permission to go to the show we have generally tried to find out first if the picture was one which was fit to be shown to children. We know there a lot of them that are not. If we have exercised some discretion in choosing the film showings which we ourselves have attended, that has not been due to any "holier than thou" attitude nor yet to any exalted opinion of our own virtue, but rather because we see very little entertainment value in the promiscuous exposure of the female figure or in gazing upon passions run riot. The type of picture can usually be determined from the advertisements announcing them.

But on Friday night we discovered that there are things shown which are not advertised, and that is the advertising films. After the showing of the feature, which by the way, was a good story and a clean, well presented drama, a well modulated tenor voice extolled the virtues of a certain brand of beer to the accompaniment of a picture showing three luscious glasses of the amber fluid being picked up by three hands and a flashback disclosed two young girls which we would judge to be about 16 or 17 years old, much endowed with class and pulchritude, and a young squirt, probably a year or two older, sipping the beer with evident relish. Resentment and disgust welled up within us. We arose and left the theater in anger, stopping only long enough to say some uncomplimentary things to the manager. That's something which we probably should not have done. After all, he was doing only what most of the theatres and almost all of the newspapers are doing; accepting beer advertising. It seems to be accepted as a matter of course these days.

We don't know what other people who saw the picture thought or did about it, and we don't care. We are merely recording our own reactions. We were born and raised to the age of eleven years in Oslo, Norway, which was at that time one of the most liquor-sodden cities in the world. We have seen drunken women (yes, on beer) dragged to headquarters by helmetted policemen, torn and bleeding from knife wounds. We have seen sodden wretches who had spent their last sou for beer digging in the garbage cans to appease their hunger. We came came to Crookston, Minnesota, when it was a lumbering town and had 27 saloons. We saw women, of a kind, in the backroom of saloons rather the worse from excessive beer drinking. We have seen lumberjacks spend a whole winter's earnings in three wild and furious days and nights of ribald, riotous drinking. We thought we had seen liquor at its worst. But the victims were all adults. If a 16-year-old girl had entered a saloon the average saloonkeeper would have read her the riot act and called a policeman to see that she was taken home to her parents for a spanking. As a newsie we were often chased out of the saloons because as the bartender said, "this ain't no place for kids." The only newspapers that carried beer and liquor advertising were those of the "Police Gazette" class. Billboard advertising expounded the superiorities of various and sundry brands of beer, but the imbibers were mature men; generally mustached or bearded gentlemen, presumably of measured and temperate habits who "knew their liquor." If a newspaper in those days had accepted beer or liquor advertising as we see it today, their circulation would have been confined to a few telephone numbers within a month. If a show house had dared to exhibit a film such as we saw on Friday evening the audience would have arose and carried the manager out and hung him to the nearest lamp-post. We state it as a fact, not as an implication that we believe in such summary and lawless climaxes, not with any idea of suggesting that anyone should go and do likewise.

So far as we have been able to find out, minors are not permitted in the "pubs" in England nor in any other civilized nation outside of our own. It has remained for the American Plute to bring liquor and beer advertising down to a fine science, catering to the young and inexperienced, the adolescent and the children in their teens. It has remained for us who prate about our high standard of living and education to allow the debauchery of our people to begin at the age when they have the least resistance to evil habits and the smallest understanding of the consequences. It has remained for our American brewers to start humanity on the toboggan to hell before they have even glimpsed the dawn of womanhood and manhood. And all for the profits in a nickel glass of beer, multiplied a million or more times.

We have never had any particular aversion to beer in the past. But we refused to accept beer, liquor and cigarette advertising and one reason was because as a cold business proposition we did not believe it advisable to send it thru the columns of our paper to two thousand or more homes thruout Northern Minnesota, in a great many of which it would be resented. We drank a glass of beer occasionally as a thirst quencher; at the age of 44 a man has usually learned to know his limitations if he is ever going to know them. But we couldn't drink another glass. The pictures of three boys just growing up, one of them entering manhood, and three girls, the youngest of which will reach school age in a year or two, would be mirrored in that foaming fluid and choke us. We are not imbued with any particular ambition to reform the world and save humanity, but those children are the only thing we have in the world, and we want to see them grow up to be decent, highminded American citizens, clean in body and soul, and that short advertising film we saw Friday night convinced us that it will be a difficult task with beer and liquor in existence and sold at a profit for which men would barter human souls.

HAS HONESTY BECOME A LOST VIRTUE?

The Broadway sandwich man who found forty thousand dollars and was honest enough to return them to their owner has gone crazy.

From an unknown laborer he sprang into national prominence over night . . .because he was honest. Financiers, industrialists and Masters of American Destiny showered him with gifts of money, clothes and mementos . . . because he was honest. Has honesty then become an extinct virtue in our land? Has honesty become so unusual that an exhibition of it merits gasps of astonishment from statesmen, and executives throughout the nation?

Time was when honesty was considered and accepted as a matter of course. We remember of an executive who said when an applicant for a position brought him a recommendation which stated that he was honest: "Honesty is no particularly outstanding virtue. We expect and assume that everyone is honest until they prove otherwise."

In the circle in which we move the fact that the man returned the money he found to its owners occasioned no astonishment. The gasps of surprise, if any, came when he was buried with gifts and eulogies for doing that which should be the most natural thing in the world to do . . . for doing what the average, ordinary American can be expected to do . . . return lost property to its legal owner. But then, we move, and live among the ordinary folks, the plain, hard-working, frugal, unassuming farmers and workers. And honesty is not an extinct virtue with them yet. That sandwichman belonged to the same class . . . that's why he went crazy. He was a member of the ordinary people where honesty is considered nothing unusual and when he found that the statesmen, the Masters of Industry, the Giants of Finance, the Rulers of America consider honesty so rare that it calls for special and effusive exhibitions . . . he went bughouse. And we don't blame him.

But the question arises in our mind: if honesty is so rare among the leading citizens; the pilars of society, of our nation today, are we not allowing ourselves to be led by a degraded class, and isn't society resting upon very unstable foundations?

WHAT'S SAUCE FOR THE GOOSE SHOULD BE SAUCE FOR THE GANDER

The Minneapolis Journal, in a recent editorial, deplores the provision in the 1934 internal revenue act requiring a summary of income to be attached to the regular income tax statement. This summary being open to public inspection. Says the Journal: "There was resentment first against the implication that every income tax payer is crooked. And there was more resentment against the opportunity afforded a neighbor, so disposed, to pry into the financial affairs of the taxpayer. There is a sense of snoopiness about it all, that is offensive to the American sense of fair play."

Now isn't that just too bad! Evidently the business of the "One Hundred Percenters" that the Journal represents is more sacred than the affairs of the average citizen who owns real estate and personal property. We have never heard the Journal "deplore" the fact that the personal property tax statement is published in order that all who see may read. Neither have we heard them raise their voice against te practice of letting any "snooper" who wishes to, look over the list of real estate taxes on record at the office of the county treasurer.

Somehow, we always thought it a healthy practice to let the public know what contribution, if any, each citizen makes to the upkeep of the government, and just how much we each pay for what we expect in return. Perhaps we may be pardoned if we fail to see that the income tax payer's contribution should be more immune from publicity than the contributions made by other tax payers, for we have never had any munitions profits, chain bank profits, nor other emoluments secured from exploiting our fellow men to be ashamed of. So far as the implication that every income taxpayer is crooked is concerned, investigations made by committees of congress have established the fact that a large share of those whom the Journal can be relied upon to defend upon any and all occasion are crooked. Which is probably the reason the Journal is weeping in this instance.

YOUTH'S NEW DEAL
(St. Paul Daily News)

"Production for use and not for profit," was demanded by those attending the midwest youth conference in St. Paul.

These young men and women of the west decided that "capitalism has failed" and the time has come for a real new deal, involving acomplet change in our economic and social system whereby our vast resources would be put fo full use for the benefit of all instead of to partial use for the essential benefit of a powerful few.

To this end they were united against war and militarism, especially military training in the higher institutions of learning. They were for the use of the money for educational purposes. They want unemployment insurance, the 30-hour week and the organization for their mutual benefit of white collar workers as well as those in overalls.

To all this the ordinary business man will say "Hooey." But it is significant that such demands are not voiced alone by our youth—or that part of it which is vocal—but find more and more support from sociologists, economists, educationalists, engineers and professional persons generally, as a glance at any of our more intelligent publications shows.

There may be something visionary about a suggestion that our vast productive potentialities, our inventive genius, even our business initiative, be applied to the benefit of everybody with the profit motive a secondary consideration.

But it is hardly as absurd as the spectacle which now presents itself of the richest nation in the world cutting the productions of food stuffs and wearing materials as well as proceeding in second gear on all services, including housing particularly, while millions are out of work and barely subsisting.

That youth should feel deeply about this maladjustment is not to be wondered at. The young, high-spirited, ambitious and energetic today find themselves not wanted in our industrial and economic scheme. There are no jobs for them—not even if they are willing to work for experience only.

Whether they will be able to do anything about it, or be able in any degree to attain their vision of a better way of living, remains to be seen. But there can be no gainsaying the soundness of their criticism of the existing order in their demand for a better deal.

Moses Said, "Is Dis a System?"

Moses, as a hero, always fascinated me. The basis of my fascination seems to rest on the fact that he was primarily a human being, subject to passion and weaknesses like other human beings. In the biblical account, the portrait of Moses is unsparing. He killed an overseer and he "buried that bum in the sand," in age-old fashion.

Then he became a hunted man—for anyone who kills an overseer is regarded as dangerous, even nowadays. In his bitterness against his hunters, he resolved to lead his countrymen back home to Israel. The success of his undertaking is now ancient history.

Moses died happy on the banks of the river Jordan. But if he could have foreseen that he had but lead his people out of the frying pan of Egyptian tyranny into the fire of inter-tribal warfare, he probably would not have been so happy. The Jews, it seems have always had a miserable existence, but the period following their removal from Egypt seems to be the most miserable.

This situation has its parallel in modern times. Instead of Israelites, we have people of all nations working for a race of overseers. The overseers in turn answer to some one else, and so on up the line, until we come to the "Big Shot," who answers for them all. But there the similarity ends. Most of us have no Israel to which we can return. Since 1929, practically all foreign born radicals have been deported from this country. Next we presume all the native radicals will be put in jail. After that, the process will be extended up the line, through our pale pink radicals, to the liberals and finally to the least conservative of the reactionaries. About that time it would be proper to have the Indians revolt and deport all those whose ancestors were not born in this country. No matter if they did not have a country to go back to, they should get out.

Anyway you look at it, I agree with Moses when he said, "Is dis a system?"

Mooney and Billings remain in San Quentin, despite the fact that the man who testified against them confessed to perjury and despite the fact that much evidence has been found proving that they were not in the vicinity of the bombing in San Francisco on that Preparedness Day so long ago. The Commonwealth Investigation

It occurs to me that, had the teachers and students at Commonwealth College at Mena, Ark., stayed within their boundary—that is, preached Socialism and all that it implies—they would not now be in trouble. But they were foolhardy enough to practice what they preached—with what results. They ought to know by now that to succeed in this system, one must say one thing and do another. It's not exactly honest, and makes one a sniveling hypocrite, but what's the difference if one wins security thereby? (News story page one).

The Farmers' Union at Washington

Washington, D. C.
Feb. 21, 1935.

"Let American Farmers Grow American Flax-seed."

This reverberated as a real battle-cry throughout Washington as Charles C. Talbott and Kenneth Hones arrived adding renewed force to the Farmers Union Legislative Committee at the Harrington Hotel here.

The weight of more than 75,000 northwest farm families was thrown squarely behind the flax-seed program proposed by M. W. Thatcher, as a test of strength, and as a preliminary marshalling of forces for a unified support of the Frazier-Lemke bill.

Monetary reform and interest reduction as prescribed by the Frazier-Lemke bill is admittedly the first objective of the committee which is working hand in hand with E. H. Everson and E. E. Kennedy of te National Farmers Union on this matter.

While monetary matters are still in the preliminary stages here, the committee is making several forceful appearances before the Agricultural Adjustment Administration as well as the Department of Agriculture on the subject of flax-seed, the production of which is rapidly slipping away from the American farmer.

Information in the hands of the committee shows that the United States purchased approximately 13,800,000 bushels of flax-seed from foreign countries in 1934, while in the same period only 5,189,000 bushels were grown here.

In the last four years flax-seed fields in the United States have dwindled from an average of 2,915,000 acres to an estimate of only 1, 133,000 for the year 1934.

"An important rotating crop is being eliminated and more than a million acres are being turned back ito wheat or other surplus crop production."

"America, long regarded as the world's greatest agricultural nation, is importing a major agricultural product, thereby eliminating a large portion of the protective tariff rates."

"High railroad rates as compared with low ocean shipping rates, these forces coupled with the low cost of foreign labor and the absence of any protection to our farmers in the way of a parity price, are the elements which are driving flax-seed production out of this country."

These are the statements which were made as a preliminary to the demand of the committee that producers of flax-seed must receive a parity price, in accordance with the law which although now in effect, is permissive and not mandatory.

In other words, flax-seed is actually a basic commodity at the present time by virtue of an amendment to the law which was endorsed by the farm groups and which was passed during May of 1934.

Under the terms of the law machinery can be set up which will operate to a parity or compensatory price in the hands of the farmer.

The problem of the committee is to urge officials into action by proving to them that a market for American grown flax-seed exists at parity prices.

Joint conferences are in progress on this point with paint manufacturers, varnish manufacturers, flax-seed crushers and processors as well as the makers of linoleum and congoleum. These merchandizers have been using fish oil and other cheaper substitutes as well as foreign flax-seed.

In addition to this, studies are being made of imported fats and oils that seriously interfere with not only the Dairy industry but with lards and tallows. In fact, all animal fats. Several conferences have been held working towards a solution of the dairy problem.

The first large scale Washington lobby for the American farmer is on in earnest, with an open frontal attack instead of the usual conferences behind closed doors.

A VISION OF THE FUTURE
By R. G. Ingersoll

I see a country filled with happy homes, with firesides of content—the foremost land of all the earth.

I see a world where thrones have crumbled and where kings are dust. The aristocracy of idleness has perished from the earth.

I sse a world without a slave. Man at last is free. Nature's forces have by science been enslaved. Lightning and light, wind and wave, frost and flame, and all the secret, subtle powers of earth and air are the tireless toilers for the human race.

I see a world at peace, adorned with every form of art, with music's myriad voices thrilled, while lips are rich with words of love and truth; a world in which no exile sighs, no prisoner mourns; a world on which the gibbet's shadow does not fall; a world where labor reaps its full reward, where work and worth go hand in hand, where the poor girl trying to win bread with the needle—the needle that has been called "the asp for the breast of the poor"—is not driven to the desperate choice of crime or death, suicide or shame.

I see a world without the beggar's outstretched palm, the miser's heartless, stony stare, the piteous wail of want, the livid lips of lies, the cruel eyes of scorn.

I see a race without disease of flesh or brain,—shapely and fair,—the married harmony of form and function,—and, as I look, life lengthens, joy deepens, love canopies the earth: and over all, in the great dome, shines the eternal star of human hope.

SEES WASHINGTON AS AN IDEAL REBEL AND PIONEER

By Gov. Floyd B. Olson
In the St. Paul Daily News Feb. 22

It is well that the American people give careful attention and thought to George Washington on his birthday anniversary. Tradition has it that he is the father of his country, and it is a wise country that nkows its own fater.

Really to know George Washington has not been altogether easy despite the fact that he has been the subject of over 400 biographies, and many of the 20,000 letters he wrote have been preserved. Earlier biographers were so accustomed to extol Washington that they nearly deified him. At least they made him so faultless that he had little appeal to his children, and no identity or fellowship with them. In the hands of early biographers, Washington became so perfect and coldly austere that he was inhuman, and might as well have been a figure in cold bronze.
in cold bronze or marble.

Later biographers have gone to the other extreme and tried to "de-bunk" and deflate him. One such charges him with being "a man of few natural gifts, self-educated, and slow-witted." Another says that he "failed to rise above the mediocrity of a small Virginia planter."

Even Claude Bowers, in his brilliant work upon "Hamilton and Jefferson" decidedly crowds Washington off the center of the stage and relegates him to the wings. Washington is now in some quarteers discounted as fervently as he was at one time extolled and adulated. In view of these extreme reversals of judgment it is high time that Americans become better acquainted with the father of our country.

To some citizens Washington has not seemed quite so American as some of our other leaders. To many he has not appeared to be so native and broadly democratic as Benjamin Franklin or Abraham Lincoln or the poet Walt Whitman. A recent French biographer by the name of Bernard Fay, calls Washington a Republican aristocrat, and writes of him under this title.

The Washington Education

Part of this impression comes from the fact that Washington was so close to the springs of our national life. He belonged to the third generation of Washingtons that had lived in America. His formal school education ended when he was 16 although he studied surveying and military tactics later. His father was a well-to-do planter with a farm on the Rappahannock which George inherited.

Washington's wealth was further increased thru marriage to the widow Martha Curtis. All in all it is said that he was worth what today would amount to about $66,000. In his time this was a considerable fortune. but, sad to relate, in Washington's home land today $66,000 is regarded as a mere bagatelle.

1929 Incomes

In 1929 there were reported to be 38,889 millionaires in the United tates who had an income of $50,000 per year. In the same year 513 individuals in this country reported incomes in excess of $1,000.000 but in 1930 the number dropped to 149. At any rate, in 1929 less than one-seventh of the population paid 92 per cent of the income tax. Could Washington return to his native land he would unquestionably be shocked at the situation, and shocked also at the appalling want and poverty he would find. Truly this has become a country of tragic contrasts! Great wealth possessed by a few, and poverty dogging the many. On the one side a perilous concentration of wealth and economic power, and on the other, a cruel wastage and scattering of manpower and of human life.

Jefferson's Estimate

The most kindly estimate of Washington was made by Thomas Jefferson, even though in their later years the two men disagreed on matters of political philosophy. He said: "It may truly be said that never did nature and fortune combine more perfectly to make a great man and to place him in the same constellation with whatever worthies have merited from man everlasting remembrance."

Is this not a remarkable estimate to come from a man who resigned from Washington's cabinet because of differences of opinion on points of policy? Do not these words of Thomas Jefferson bring Washington very close?

This estimate of Washington by Jefferson would seem to be adequate, but after all it is the portrayal of an elder statesman. It is in the pattern of the Gilbert Stuart picture of Washington which one often sees in shop and in store windows. In this picture the father of his country is gray in hair, sedate, prudent, wise and complacent.

The Rebel

The Washington that draws my admiration most is the picture of him as a young man, drawn by Peale. It is a picture painted at Valley Forge, and it is the Washington who won the revolution—young, alert, vigilant and determined. The Washington whom I love most is a rebel who would have been hung by the British if he had been defeated and caught. Washington as a wiged and powdered elder statesman has been over-emphasized, while Washington as a rebel, a rugged frontiersman, a revolutionary, a daring pioneer who loved the wilderness and liberty, has been neglected. It was this Washington who thrilled to the vision of his nation's greatness and destiny. This is Washington the democrat, whom I love and honor most. He may have begun his career as one of the last great feudal lords, but he ended it as one of the greatest champions of liberty—as one of the most creative Democratic-Republicans in the modern world.

Minute Sermons
By Dr. Crawford Grays

Recently there was a Christian Unity service in the Cathedral of St. John Divine of New York City. Two thousand people were assembled and preachers of different faiths preached for Unity and the people prayed for Unity. A truly epoch-making movement is under way to bring to an end sectarian division. Denominationalism is dying. Sometimes we are tempted to think it isn't dying fast enough, but it is good enough to know that it is dying. Some day it will die and be buried in a grave deep and dark. For I have faith enough to believe the day is coming when denominationalism will lay aside their conflicting isms and join hands in a genuine Unity of Christian Fellowship. When this day comes, Christians will walk together and be at peace as they should. They will do more than walk; they will leap and run for they will no longer be bound by the tradition chains of a decadent denominationalism.

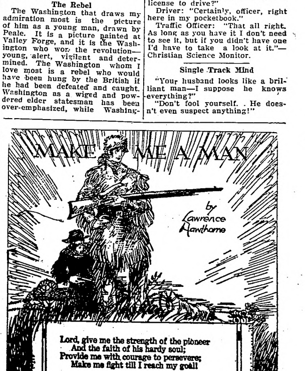
Single Track Mind

"Your husband looks like a brilliant man—I suppose he knows everything?"

"Don't fool yourself. He doesn't even suspect anything!"



Lord, give me the strength of the pioneer
And the faith of his hardy soul;
Provide me with courage to persevere;
Make me fight till I reach my goal!

Let weaklings indulge in a sheltered life
Where they curse when their luck goes bad,
But fit me for battle with storm and strife;
Give me brawn like my fathers had!

I want to be known as a man who wins,
As a fellow with nerve and pluck
Who finishes everything he begins,
And as one who can whip his luck!
